There is, perhaps, no parish in London to compare with this for poverty, immorality, and crime. The church, of which Rev. R. C. Billing is vicar, here is the centre of constant evangelistic effort and of direct rescue work. We have seen during the Mission week the outcast and homeless gathered in for a free breakfast, and the miserable fallen women assembling every afternoon at one centre or another, allured by an invitation to tea. God has wonderfully blessed these efforts. A temporary "Refuge" has been provided, in which the poor, lost women could be at once received, when moved by God's Spirit to seek to turn from their evil ways. Some Christian ladies not only went among them seeking them in their homes, and receiving them when they came to the meetings, but living for the time in the "Refuge" and encouraging those who sought shelter there to turn unto their merciful Saviour and to cleave to Him. They have been richly rewarded.

The great church has been thronged by crowds of the very poorest and the most degraded, and God has been in the midst of them. It was a solemn sight to see how hundreds remained to the after-meeting, and to witness the anxious seekers with the Christian workers kneeling by their side. It was late each night before the church was gradually emptied. Many left in tears, and the tears were often tears of joy and gladness. If there was no excitement there was deep emotion, and a solemn spirit seemed to pervade the whole congregation.

A remarkable feature was the number of young lads and girls who were to be seen at every gathering, and we learn that not a few have been brought to Christ, and some received into Homes, to be afterwards cared and provided for. We can assuredly say that here "the poor had the Gospel preached to them," and that they heard it gladly. Some most touching and encouraging cases of conversion are reported, and the greatest care has been taken to provide for the further instruction and edification of those who have confessed Christ.

In the earlier part of the day the services were often attended by business men and others whose occupation is in these parts, but who do not reside here. Among these, as among the poor, the Spirit of God has borne witness to the Word of his grace. The blessing has been great, and it has been widely diffused.

It has been most encouraging to behold the harmony that prevails here among Christians, and how Nonconformists have been as much interested in the Mission as Churchmen.

The Mission to Gentiles is succeeded by a special Mission to the Jews, and this is now being carried on with much promise of success. Rev. B. A. Schleicher, one of the clergy of the parish, Dr. N. Bewley, Mr. Oppenheim, and Dr. M. Laseron, are engaged in this work.

ST. SILAS', PENTON-STREET.

The services here were very well attended. There were special services for men, and for young men and young women. Contrary to expectation, there was a large attendance at the mid-day service, many who work at the factories in the parish coming to the church during the dinner-hour. There was a very large gathering of children each day, nearly 1000, coming entirely from the Board schools in the parish, and to each service the Board school teachers came with great willingness to help to keep order.

The singing was very hearty, and the choir sang outside the door of the church just before service began, and visited other parts of the parish. A body of about forty workers had been actively preparing for some weeks for the Mission.

ALL SAINTS', STEPNEY, E.

The Mission services here have been greatly blessed; Rev. Percy Waller, of Birmingham, was Missioner, assisted by eight other clergymen, and a large staff of workers. The work was very varied. There were open-air services, parochial visiting, services for men only, women only, young men, young women, open-air and Mission services to Jews, and special daily services for children, all of which have been well attended. To use figures, from November 16 to 24, 121 services and meetings have taken place, 58,000 tracts, &c., were distributed. We rejoice to say that the work of the church in this wonderful corner of Christ's vineyard has been signally owned and blessed by God.

WEST HACKNEY.

The work was carried on here from three centres, viz., the Parish Church, the Mission Hall in Clevedon-street, and the Mission-room in Hindle-street. The services were of a different character in the different places. The object aimed at in church was rather to build up the faith of those already following Christ, whilst at the Mission-rooms the need of conversion was more largely dealt with and the comfort of religion for the poor and down-trodden set forth.

The Missioner was the Dean of Salisbury, whose words of Christian sympathy woke an echo in many hearts. He was especially happy in the addresses on the "Devout Life," which he delivered at the parish church daily, and also in the words of gentle counsel and warning which he spoke to the working people at the two Mission centres. The Dean was assisted at the beginning of the week by Rev. J. L. Stackhouse, Vicar of Berkeley, who has a powerful and effective delivery. On Sunday, November 23, Canon Scott Holland preached to a vast congregation in the parish church. He displayed his usual eloquence and learning, but it may be doubted whether a more direct mode of dealing with his subject—"The special temptations incident to men of business"—might not have been more advantageous.

The parochial clergy took their share in the work and the Rector of the parish (Rev. Charles J. Robinson) addressed a large gathering of young women on Thursday evening upon their value and their duties as Christian helpers, and upon certain faults which impaired their usefulness. The congregations throughout the Mission week were at all the centres very good, and many were present who before had been strangers to the faith. The lay-helpers worked most diligently—visiting every house and even every room in the poorer quarters, and almost "compelling" the people "to come in."

ST. STEPHEN'S CHURCH, NORTH BOW.

A matter of experience known to the clergy of this parish may be useful to others in preparation for a Mission. For five weeks previous to the commencement of the London Mission, a special band of visitors went in pairs to all the families of the parish each week with a special notice. The notices began with the letter of the Bishop, and was succeeded by a leaflet explaining the Mission. Then came the Mission preacher's letter, followed by a lithographed letter of the clergy. Lastly, came a Gospel leaflet, with a touching story, illustrating Frances Ridley Havergal's hymn, "I gave my life for thee."

The numerical result of all this painstaking and expense was a very small percentage. However, the good effect on the visitors was very marked. Many came forward who were quite fresh to this kind of work, or, indeed, any other work for God, and many followed up their visits during the Mission week with repeated calls upon the people to urge them to come. Many of the old seat-holders readily came forward and gave their help in church and out. One lady was so successful in visiting that she established a weekly Mission among the young women at a silk factory.

A very zealous band of young men, belonging to the Bow Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, went out every night to sing in the streets and give invitations. More people were brought into church by this work at the moment than by all the previous visitation. Those who came early were happy in singing with the choir for about half an hour before each service. The church choir was supplemented by a Mission choir, and sang very heartily. The congregation increased as time went on, but scarcely ever exceeded 500 on the week-day evenings. On the second Sunday of the Mission the evening congregation could not have been far short of 1500, and at the special service for children, on the previous Friday, there were nearly 1000.

The Mission preacher was Rev. W. E. Burroughs, vicar of Mariners' Church, Kingstown, Ireland, who is accustomed to conduct two Missions yearly. He is one of the clearest of Gospel preachers. His sermons on Isaiah liii. 6, and on the subject, "The greatness of man's sin is the very reason why God must pardon it," were so clear and so much blessed to the congregation that some said "they had no need to stay to the after-meeting, because salvation had been made so clear to them in the sermon."

Many individual cases of blessing were deeply interesting. In at least two cases it was known that young married people had together become converted. One Sunday-school teacher had the joy of bringing two lads (his firstfruits) to the feet of Jesus, and then asked himself the questions, "Where had hitherto been his faith?" "Why had he not, before this, spoken individually to his boys?"

Some people were converted who had not attended a place of worship for years. One such, who amongst many others had been attracted by the singing outside the church, which was conducted by the Vicar's wife, having entered the church, was so moved that he confessed that "through the misery of a sinful life he had that day seriously meditated committing suicide." Some, who had been communicants for years, discovered that they were not true Christians, but now accepted the offer of salvation.

At the service of praise on Tuesday evening the Missioner invited those who had been blessed during the Mission to partake of the Holy Communion. This was responded to by 180 persons. Some had never been at the Lord's table before. Mr. Burroughs was the first recipient, and he then slipped away from the church and the parish, leaving the souls that he had won kneeling in prayer. Immediately after the supper the Vicar spoke a few words of encouragement and thankfulness, and said "he believed that there were still some in the church who had not partaken of the Communion, and who although thankful for a present salvation, feared to come forward." Very slowly one after another rose and came to the Lord's table, until eight more were seen kneeling there for the first time. The congregation were deeply touched at the sight.

EPISCOPAL JEWS' CHAPEL.

For nearly two months beforehand we had a special weekly prayer-meeting, attended, on the average, by sixty or seventy members of my congregation, for asking God's guidance and blessing on the effort. This meeting became a daily one as the time drew nearer. We made great use of the printing press, and some thirty or forty Christian workers visited about 120 streets around us from house to house, while others sang the Gospel in the street or invited the passers-by. The gates of the Bethnal-green Museum and the Cambridge-heath Railway-station were not forgotten. At all the Gospel services there were a few Hebrew Christians and inquirers; but we have arranged for special meetings for Jews in Stepney, Whitechapel, and elsewhere.

"Compassion for souls" and "Cleansing by the Blood" were the subjects at the workers' meetings; while at the services for believers the subjects were "Whole-heartedness," "Fellowship with Christ," "The Word of God," "Consecration," "Service," and "The Lord's Coming." At the Mission services in the evening, earnest, loving, and pointed appeals were made to the unconverted, and at the after-meetings the soul's "excuses" and "difficulties" were dwelt upon. To these after-meetings the greater part of the congregation remained.

It is too early to speak much of results, but many believers testify that they have been helped. Several cases of deep impression at least have come under my notice. At our thanksgiving service on Monday evening, sixteen sent in a request that they might be allowed to thank God because they had found peace in Jesus during the Mission.

BOW PARISH CHURCH.

The services held have been conducted by Rev. J. H. Haslam, of Birmingham, who is already well known in the Mission field at home. As is his custom, he had plenty of services, the average being five or six addresses daily, including some to believers, some to men, women and children respectively. Every evening there was the usual mission service for all, followed by an after-meeting. At most of these, except in the evenings, the Missioner had a regular course of subjects printed and distributed beforehand, and this gave an additional encouragement to attend.

Special mention should be made of the numbers of men and children who attended their respective services, the latter taking a great interest, which was encouraged by the offer of prizes for those who wrote out the best résumé of each day's sermon. On the Saturday afternoon there was a service for Jews, of whom there are a good many in the neighbourhood. This was conducted by Rev. J. H. Brühl.

The evening addresses of the Missioner were very solemn and affecting, and one cannot but feel that much fruit will in the future result from the services held each night.

Undoubtedly the parish is a difficult one, but the efforts now begun and carried on by the little band of faithful workers, who have greatly helped the Rector and Missioner in their labours for the spiritual good of those around, cannot be in vain.

ST. JOHN THE EVANGELIST, GROVE-STREET, COMMERCIAL-ROAD, E.

Some time before, the parish was mapped out into districts which were assigned to the workers who from various West-end parishes made house-to-house visitation. The Missioners were Rev. Cyril Bickersteth, and Hon. and Rev. R. Adderley. The real work began on Sunday, the 16th; there were services all day long, from 7 in the morning till 9.30 p.m. The Mission service proper at 7 was very largely attended, many persons, "bonnetless women" (as the Pall Mall Gazette described them) and even with clothes more or less dilapidated, attended, who probably had not been inside a church since their childhood,

A large body of gentlemen from the West-end, under the direction of Mr. Bevan and Mr. G. Wilkinson (son of the Bishop of Truro), did great service by inviting the working-men whom they met in the streets to accompany them to the house of God. They were everywhere listened to with deep respect, and in most cases the men responded to the call made upon them. The Missioners have been untiring in their exertions, and their earnestness and loving zeal to souls will not easily be forgotten by those with whom they came in contact. The crowning service was on Wednesday evening, when praise and thanksgiving were rendered for mercies vouchsafed. The Church of England working men were in full force, and there was an immense congregation. A very powerful and impressive sermon was delivered by Rev. Cyril Bickersteth.

To strengthen and further the work of the Mission, a series of sermons will be preached during the coming Advent season, on Sunday mornings by the Rev. E. T. Lewis, and the Vicar will preach every Sunday evening at 7 o'clock; Wednesday evenings the Rev. H. J. Frye will occupy the pulpit, and the Rev. R. B. Hill will give an address every Monday at eight o'clock in the Mission Hall in Cannon-street-road.

ST. BENET'S, STEPNEY.

The Mission services here were very well attended, and the names of those receiving blessing show that it has been a time of gathering up the fruits of the various efforts regularly carried on in the parish. Rev. Thomas Richardson writes to say that there is much blessing upon the Sunday-schools, the weekly tract visitation, and the Church Army work, so that very few strangers have been brought in at this time. This is an encouragement to all those who are doing plodding work day by day all the year through. If all our London congregations were as earnest in this steady, continuous work as Mr. Richardson's band of workers, there would be little call for special efforts.

By GAWIN KIRKHAM.

I divided my time during the ten days' Mission just closed between St. Matthias, Poplar, St. John's, Islington, and St. Stephen's, Spitalfields.

ST. MATTHIAS, POPLAR.

The vicar is Rev. Charles Neil, well known as a writer and editor of homiletical works, and a good parochial organiser. The preacher was Rev. G. F. T. Prendergast, of St. Thomas', West Ham. The Mission was conducted in the schoolrooms instead of the church, as allowing for more freedom of action, and the introduction of lay preachers. Preparatory meetings were held half an hour before the Mission service, and these prepared the mind and heart to enter more fully into the public meeting.

Immediately the chief service closed an attempt was made to separate the people. Young men were encouraged to pass into one room, and young women into another, while an after-meeting was continued in the main room. All who wished to see the Mission preacher went into another room. This plan evidently worked well, and the outcome was a gracious work of the Holy Ghost, both in the conversion of sinners and the quickening of saints. About eighteen gave thanks publicly in church the second Sunday, specifying the distinct blessing they had received; and altogether the Vicar was very much encouraged.

ST. JOHN THE EVANGELIST, ISLINGTON.

Rev. Charles Ough and his devoted wife have but recently come to labour at this church, and report a hard soil to work upon. The Missioner was Rev. Mr. Watney, whose parish is near Lincoln. By request of the Vicar, the Open-air Mission sent preachers for the open-air; but, lacking a band of workers from the church, no great impression was made upon the outside population by this means. There were not lacking cases of blessing, but in my judgment, the Mission preacher, interesting and clear as he was, committed a mistake in prolonging unduly his first meeting, and so people were not inclined to stay for the second.

ST. STEPHEN'S, SPITALFIELDS.

This parish contains more than 5000 souls, including many Jews and many poor people. The church has been erected twenty years, and Rev. J. S. Whichelow, its present vicar, has but recently come. The Mission preacher was Rev. F. W. Dodd, sent by the Church Parochial Mission, a young clergyman, fervent in spirit and anxious to win souls. The Mission was well managed. Each evening the workers met for tea in the vestry, followed by prayer. Then an hour in the streets, which deepened in interest as the days went by. The Mission preacher and the curate were out most nights. We sent helpers from the Open-air Mission; others came from All Souls', Langham-place, Mildmay, and elsewhere. A considerable number were thus brought into the church, where the Vicar waited to receive them. I was particularly struck with the number of Jewish children, and of poor women who came. The first meeting lasted about an hour, and great stress was laid upon the after-meeting, where many deeply interesting cases were dealt with. My heart was specially drawn out after a young Jew.

The elasticity of the Church of England was shown by solo-singing and by laymen praying in the church. At the thanksgiving meeting about seventy-five partook of the Lord's Supper together. I feel sure that much good was accomplished in this parish, and that fruit will abound to the glory of God.

BATTERSEA.—We had a visit of God's honoured servant, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, last Lord's-day evening. His message was with great power. The audience was deeply moved by his earnest appeals. At the after prayer-meeting quite a number held up their hands, desiring to be guided, should the Lord open up the way for them to go to the Mission-field. Several young men, at the close, sought a personal interview with Mr. Radcliffe on the subject. D. M. Cameron.

TRUST HIM TO DO IT.

By WILLIAM LUFF.

NOT only ask Him, but trust Him to do it,
Leaving thy prayer on his Fatherly breast,
Fully believing his mercy will guard it,
Nourish it, nurse it, till stalwart and blest.

Hast thou been pleading for gracious forgiveness?
Asking a pardon through Jesus thy Lord?
Not only ask Him, but trust Him to do it,
Listening keenly to catch the first word.

Hast thou an effort, a holy achievement?
Great are the issues that poise in the scale;
Not only ask Him, but trust an acceptance—
Asking and trusting thou never canst fail.

Art thou but hopeful perhaps He may bless thee,
If peradventure the deed should be right?
Not only ask Him, but trust He will do it,
Jesus thy merit, Jehovah thy might.

Oh! we too often, content with the asking,
Leave the high throne of his infinite power,
Hardly expecting one humble petition—
Oh! to be trustful in prayer's quiet hour.

Ask Him in trouble to bring thee safe through it,
Ask Him for all that thy spirit may need;
Not only ask Him, but trust Him to do it,
Knowing He honours the promise we plead.

DR. SOMERVILLE IN GREECE.

THE following is translated from the Ephemeris, a daily paper in Athens, of November 17:—

"There was something peculiar and original in the re-union held the other evening in the 'Parnassus' club-room. The very announcement that Dr. Somerville would deliver an address by means of an interpreter, and that during the intervals hymns would be sung, made many people wonder to what extent this dual system of lecturing would prove successful. Nevertheless, the Scotch missionary (who is sojourning here, and who is perhaps seventy years old) by means of his most skilful exordium contrived to carry away with him, so to speak, the sympathies of his audience. He was full of life upon the platform whence he spoke, and his gestures were most expressive.

"Dr. Somerville related his wanderings over the five continents where he had preached the Gospel, and as a reason for his coming here, he ingeniously set forth his unbounded admiration for Greek learning and the Greek tongue, through which alone was the Gospel spread throughout the world. The chief subject of his discourse was the worship due to Christ for all that he has endured for us. We leave others to judge of the doctrinal part of the speech, but we confess that we admired his rhetorical ability. To this was contributed also the ease with which the interpreter rendered into Greek, phrase by phrase, the discourse of the Scottish doctor.

"The opening prayer by Mr. Sakelarios was perhaps not necessary, but even this was according to the system usual in Evangelical meetings. During the intervals a choir of young ladies and men sang to the accompaniment of an instrument various hymns, which the audience heard with pleasure."

CABMEN IN BERLIN.—The Berlin Cabmen's Trade Union has started a newspaper called Der Droschkenkutscher, of which the first number has just been published. If the Cabman intends to keep the resolutions with which it starts, it will do well to begin by inquiring into the life of the Berlin 'bus conductor. This servant of one of the wealthiest German companies works eighteen hours every day seven days a week, bears the full responsibility for every coin which passes through his hands, and is heavily fined for any irregularity. For this he receives a daily pay of somewhat less than half a crown. Should the 'bus conductor ever think of going to church he pays his company for the privilege. Should he fall ill his pay is lost at once, and as for his meals, he swallows them, such as they are, while waiting for passengers at an omnibus station. The murmuring London 'busmen will do well to think of this, and complain no more.—Pall Mall Gazette.

MEDICAL MISSIONS IN INDIA.

ADDRESS BY DR. VALENTINE.

AT the Annual Meeting of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society and Livingstone Medical Missionary Training Institution, held in the Royal Hotel, Edinburgh, on November 20, Rev. Dr. Valentine, Principal of the Agra Medical Missionary Training Institution, speaking on the subject of training natives of India for Mission work, said:—

The subject of the training of a native agency for all departments of Mission work in India, was one that occupied a large amount of the time and attention of the members of the Decennial Missionary Conference, held at Calcutta, in the beginning of 1883. The speakers, one and all, dwelt not only upon its importance but absolute necessity. In point of fact, colleges and institutions for the training of native pastors, catechists, colporteurs, and teachers, exist in connection with all of our missionary societies in India. One of the most hopeful and encouraging forms of progress that has been made in the Mission field in India has been the increase of native pastors and native agents for all departments of Mission work. The native ordained agents in the year 1871 numbered 381; in 1881 they had increased to 574.

The necessity for a native agency is apparent when we remember the extent of the field to be covered, and the small number of foreign missionaries in the field. It is estimated that there are about 300 millions of inhabitants in India, and for these 300 millions of people—a population equal to the whole of Russia, Turkey, Germany, France, Austria, Hungary, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, the United States of America, and the United Kingdoms of Great Britain and Ireland—there are only 689 foreign missionaries; or, in other words, if all the missionaries in India were equally distributed over the country, there would only be about six missionaries to a population equal to the whole of Scotland.

Then there is the great difficulty of getting men and women to come forward to engage in Mission work, and there is this other difficulty of getting many to support them.

There is another consideration—the knowledge of the language. Many of our missionaries not only speak the languages of India well, but are accomplished linguists. Still even the best of us speak the language as foreigners, and very imperfectly, while there are shades of meaning which even the best cannot express. The native agent speaks to his own people in his and their own language.

The habits, thoughts, ways of life, and general access to the Hindu and Mahomedan mind are incomparably better known and appreciated by the Hindu or Mahomedan himself than by any foreigner, however learned and experienced he may be. I would also remind you of the climatic difficulty. How often is it the case that the most hopeful missionary course on account of sickness is speedily brought to a close, and the missionary compelled to return home, and doomed to spend the remainder of his life in exile in his native land!

In this connection, too, I would remark that the Church in India can never have a consistent policy, or uninterrupted growth, until it has a native ministry, and is self-supporting and self-governing. An old missionary, after twenty or thirty years in India, is compelled, on account of failing health, to leave his station, and is succeeded by a much younger and less experienced man, whose first act oftentimes is, when he comes into power, to upset the arrangements and work which for years the older missionary has been building up. There are many other considerations that will occur to yourselves, that render it absolutely necessary that a native agency should be raised as speedily as possible.

Now, if these reasons are applicable to the necessity of training an evangelistic agency, there are even stronger reasons for the training of native medical missionaries. I have already said that at the close of 1881 there were 689 foreign missionaries in India, and of these only 28 were fully qualified medical men; and yet until three years ago nothing was done in the way of training fully-qualified medical missionaries. In the year 1881 the Agra Medical Missionary Training Institution was established to supply this want. We opened in that year with ten students, sent to us by all the Missionary Societies labouring in the Punjab, Rajputana, and the North-West Provinces of India; viz., the Church Missionary Society, the Society for the Propogation of the Gospel, the London, Baptist, American and Scottish Presbyterian, and Episcopal Missionary Societies. Several of the students have already graduated at the Agra Medical College, and are now working in connection with the missionary societies by whom they were supported.

Agra was selected on account of its central position to the Punjaub, North-West Provinces, Rajputana, and the Central Provinces of India. The question of language had also much to do in making us fix on Agra. As you may be aware, there are no less than 123 languages spoken by the people of India. This one difficulty is itself of much greater importance than can well be imagined in this country. In some instances it has been proposed to get over the difficulty by ignoring the native languages altogether, and teaching the native agents in English and in the presidency towns.

This question, too, was brought up at the Calcutta Missionary Conference and the Ladies' Missionary Conference at Lahore, and the conclusions unanimously arrived at were: First, "that a native agent should be taught in the language of the people among whom he is to spend his life;" secondly, "that during the whole course of his student life he should as much as possible live amongst his own people." The Urdu and Hindi languages are those in use in Agra, and by means of these we are able to speak to at least 95 millions of people.

Another and a most important reason that induced us to open the institution at Agra was that there is at that place a Government Medical College. By the great kindness of Sir William Muir, our students receive the whole of their medical education free of all expense; and not only so, but they are allowed to compete for scholarships, and I am very thankful to say that some of our students have taken such scholarships as enable them to be self-supporting. The students are Christian young men, not merely nominally so, but as far as man can judge they give ample evidence that they are so in reality. They live and board in the institution, and, as I have already said, attend medical classes—a four years' course—and graduate as first-class native doctors at the Agra Medical College.

During the whole of their course we have systematic reading of the Word of God. They also engage in Sabbath-school teaching, are taken to preach in the Bazaar and at Melas by experienced missionaries; as they advance in their studies they preach to native Christian congregations.

Our desire is that our students shall not only be thoroughly trained medical men, but thoroughly equipped medical missionaries. Our principle is and ever has been that the success of a medical missionary does not consist in the number of limbs he may cut off—or, better, cure without cutting off—nor upon the number of blind eyes he may open, or deaf ears unstop; not upon the number of patients that he may register in his dispensary or hospital book; but upon the number of poor sinners he leads to the Lord Jesus Christ.

I have spoken about the matter of expense, and this is another powerful argument for the employment of native agents. To educate a European missionary and land him on the shores of India the sum of £600 would be required. If you add to that the time that would be required before he is able fairly to commence work, £400 more would be necessary, or in all £1000. For the training of a fully-qualified native medical missionary—one who is ready to commence work from the day he leaves the institution—is only £80. Or, in other words, we feed, clothe, house, educate, and supply with books a student on £16 a year. The salary of a European medical missionary is £325 a year; the salary of a native medical missionary is £50.

We are desirous of opening a department for native Christian young women, and the present time is most opportune for us doing so, inasmuch as female classes have during the last year been opened in the Agra College. These classes are attended by Hindoo and Mahomedan women, who will practise their profession in the Zenanas, and close the doors against our native female medical missionaries. We could purchase a house well adapted for a home in which young Christian women could reside while attending the class, for the sum of £600. Who will assist in this matter?

OPEN AIR MISSION.

A SUGGESTIVE address, entitled "A Sevenfold View of the Christian Worker," was given by Mr. Gawin Kirkham, at the quarterly meeting of the West London Auxiliary of the Open Air Mission, held on the 24th ult. in Stafford Rooms. The titles were all taken from one chapter—2 Timothy ii., and were thus treated: The son (v. 1) suggested Affection; the soldier, (v. 3) Endurance; the wrestler, (v. 5) Skill; the husbandman, (v. 6) Patience; the workman, (v. 15) Thoroughness; the vessel, (v. 21) Fitness; and the servant, (v. 24) Subjection. These points were all dwelt upon in succession and were illustrated by other passages, and by incidents gathered from experience. It was noted that all these figures implied activity save the vessel, and that it was found in most people's experience much easier to be active than passive. The list began with sonship and ended with service, showing that there must first be a heart to love before the Lord would accept a hand to serve.

Mr. William Miller presided over the meeting, and encouraging accounts of summer work were given by Mr. C. J. Brooks, Mr. Charles Cook, Mr. William Davis, Mr. William Taylor, and others.

GREENOCK Y.M.C.A.

IN connection with the annual week of prayer and effort for young men, there has just been concluded a twelve-days' mission in Greenock, by Mr. Oscar Owers, of the London Evangelisation Society. Notwithstanding the unfavourable weather during a part of the time, and the excitement consequent on a Parliamentary election, the meetings, on the whole, have been well attended. Bible readings were held every afternoon, and evangelistic meetings in the evening. Mr. Owers made a deep impression on many by his very effective addresses. The Christians were greatly edified, and considerable blessing was likewise received by the unsaved, and also by many who, while professing to be believers, had no assurance of sins forgiven.

Very few evangelists have made so many friends in Greenock in such a short time as Mr. Owers, and that only by reason of his valuable teaching, and unsparing efforts to build up believers and win the unsaved for Christ. Unfortunately the ministers of the town were conspicuous by their absence from the meetings. But we cordially commend Mr. Owers, and men such as he, to ministers and congregations in Scotland for evangelistic effort and Bible teaching.

W. L.

WYCLIF, THE PIONEER OF THE REFORMATION.—His doctrine was condemned at the Council of Constance, and his bones were ordered to be burned. The ashes were collected with care, and cast into the brook that they might no more pollute God's earth. That brook, as Fuller has quaintly said, "did convey his ashes into Avon, Avon into Severn, Severn into the narrow seas, and they into the main ocean. And thus the ashes of Wyclif became an emblem of his doctrine, which is now dispersed all the world over." This country had no Luther in the sixteenth century, because it had its Wyclif in the fourteenth, and its Reformation was cast so much into the mould he had shaped for it that no name can yet be named which has a right to eclipse his.—Good Words for December.

Notes and Comments.

OUR readers will observe that with this issue we give a gratis copy of The Christian Almanack for 1885. We hope it may so meet with their approval that they will further its distribution.

The prison authorities have, we understand, resolved to remove the inmates of Coldbath-fields, Pentonville, and Milbank prisons, so as to utilise those well-known sites for open spaces and workmen's dwellings. Such a change would in many ways be conducive to public interest and advantage.

Dr. Campbell's scheme for raising a national Fawcett Memorial Fund, and devoting it to the higher education of the blind, seems likely to become an accomplished fact. A committee is being formed, with the Duke of Westminster as its president, and Lord John Manners as vice-president, having this end in view. It may be expected that something worthy of the deceased statesman, and of the important object aimed at, will be the result.

A special Fawcett Memorial Fund in connection with the Rowland Hill Benevolent Fund is also formed, with a view to assisting any blind persons connected with Post-office employés, who number over 53,000 persons. There is peculiar fitness in associating the late Postmaster-General's name with relief provided for these afflicted ones, and the Rowland Hill Fund trustees have done well to set apart a limited portion of it as a nucleus for this object. The Lord Mayor has opened a fund at the Mansion House on behalf of the project.

It is a bright ray in the midst of deep gloom to find the Mayor of Newcastle and other gentlemen of large practical experience and acquaintance with facts, speaking hopefully of the outlook as to the destitution which prevails in the north of England. In Newcastle alone more than 1500 families are destitute, while the number of unemployed is at least double that. Generous relief is being given, and such statements as the following, made at a public dinner in Newcastle the other night, should be widely known, as tending to cheer the public mind and lead to courage among the struggling masses who suffer from the depression:—

"The Mayor said he did not take a gloomy view of the position. There were some very pleasing signs in the present of a better state of things to come in the coal trade. There never was such a large output as at the present moment, but the prices were depressed in the iron trade. There were also evidences of a better demand setting in. Another gratifying fact was that whereas a short time ago there were no fewer than 104 steamers in the Tyne, which, taken at £20,000 each, represented a capital of more than two millions sterling absolutely valueless and bringing in no return, that number was being week by week reduced, the number now being fifty, showing that the trade of the world had become more active. He was told by a shipbuilder on Friday that he had got an order for two large ships, a thing which he had not had for months before. The increased demand for money, as shown by the higher Bank rate, indicated a very healthy condition of things. It showed that the channels of trade were opening out, and that there was more demand for proper and legitimate investments."

The amount of patience, fortitude, and endurance shown by many of the industrial classes under circumstances of a trying and distressing kind is greatly to their credit, and furnishes a strong claim on public sympathy and aid. Mr. Benjamin C. Brown, of the firm of Messrs. R. and W. Hawthorn, engine manufacturers, speaking at the same time and place in Newcastle, said, in reference to the unemployed workmen in that town:—

"From personal observation he was assured that the present distress was real. He had visited many of the homes. If they wanted to see the Newcastle working men and women at their best they should see them in adversity, for it was then they showed how great was their unselfishness and their independence in the best sense of the word."

The same statement applies to thousands in similar circumstances in other great centres of industry.

The advance of the Gospel in Japan is one of the most remarkable facts in the missionary records of modern times. Striking testimony to this is borne by Dr. Hepburn, of the Presbyterian Mission, who is translating the Old Testament into Japanese, and who, during the ten years of his residence in the country, has built up a self-supporting native church which has just elected a pastor of its own, relieving him of the work of preaching. He says:—

"Fifteen or twenty years hence I doubt whether a foreign missionary will be needed in this country. We have already a synod, three presbyteries, twenty-nine ardent native ministers, one hundred and seventeen young men in our colleges, and a thousand church members and Sabbath-scholars. And I have lived to see all this! Japan is merging rapidly from heathenism; it can never go back. If all the foreign missionaries were expelled to-morrow, the work would be carried on by natives."

The Shah of Persia and his Court have determined, it appears, to resist and prevent the spread of European influences in their land. Persian youths are no longer to be sent to Europe for training, as has frequently been the case hitherto. A College has been started at Teheran, where all branches of education are to be taught, for the express purpose of preventing the resort of Persian students to Western Universities. The construction of railways is also forbidden, not one existing in the country, and that simply to prevent the spread of Western civilisation. It is not to be wondered at that most recent accounts of the country speak of the general mismanagement of public affairs, and of the corruption of official systems. Reforms must come, and, for the sake of the people, the sooner the better.

The corruption of municipal officials is so general a grievance, and one so prolific of evil, that it demands every possible endeavour to provide a remedy. A correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette contributes some useful information upon the subject in a recent issue. He says:—

"Bad masters make bad servants. It is the corruption among the municipal bodies themselves that creates the mischief. Few taxpayers realise the fact that an honest and zealous official is often necessarily an unpopular one. His tenure of office is very fragile, and sooner or later, unless personally very powerful, he is removed. His position is much more difficult than that of a cook or butler, buyer or clerk. Their employers profit by their honesty, but the nominal employers of the official in many cases profit by his corruption. Officials determined to be honest and to make others act honestly always have enemies, and often fail to do the good they would. 'Why should we be dictated to by an official?' say the independent members. If he would follow his board, and not try to control the pettiness, corruption, and ignorance which display themselves in the conduct of a majority or a powerful minority of the members, if he would be satisfied with being too conscientious to accept a 'tip' himself and not meddle with those who do not see as he sees—in short, if he would float with the stream, and not be always trying to obstruct it, certain members of his board, and those the most noisy, and perhaps the most popular, would vie with each other in sounding his praises."

The reform of municipal bodies themselves is essential to that of their official representatives and agents. A simplification of the system of local government, and an impartial and determined action on the part of ratepayers in reference to the election of local authorities, is a necessity. Political proclivities of one kind or another ought not to rule in these spheres, nor should too rigid ideas of economy be entertained: what is best for all parties, most tending to righteous dealing with local affairs, should be the one object kept in view. The writer quoted above speaks truly when he says:—

"House agents, house jobbers, house farmers and builders, are always well represented on London boards, as well as provincial ones, and they know that as a rule the less an officer is paid the less he is likely to do, and the so-called 'economists' are in sympathy with this class of representative, so that in many a case the medical officer of health, the house jobber, and the 'economist' are alike contented, and the misery and poverty of those who cannot help themselves are perpetuated. Corrupt representatives are most agreeably served by corrupt or incompetent officials, or officials whose time is otherwise engaged. Such officials appear to cost the ratepayers less money, and any man may easily be elected to a seat on a public board upon a cry of non-expenditure."

The Early Closing Association is already astir to promote the securing of four days' holiday to all shop assistants at Christmas. The secretary writes to the various daily journals, urging that as only a few hours on the Saturday morning stand between closing on Christmas Eve (Wednesday) until Monday, it might easily be arranged. This was done on a large scale in 1879, when Christmas Day also fell on a Thursday, and many large employers have already signified their intention to do it this year. To a large number of deserving and hard-worked assistants such a holiday would prove a great boon, and it is to be hoped employers generally may see their way clear to arrange for it.

Rev. Archibald G. Brown, 22, Bow-road, E., writes to us as follows:—

"The distress amongst the people now is terrible. One of my missionaries has just come in to say that the bread tickets for the week have all gone in one day. My heart aches enough to break at the misery I see. I do trust your readers will not forget us in this time of want. Tea, bread, coals, and blankets are our great need."

Frequent reports have lately appeared in the daily papers of prize-fights in various places. One is described by the Daily Chronicle as "the best organised and gamely contested prize-fight which has been brought off for some time." After twenty-four rounds one of the combatants "seemed quite exhausted;" but after "seven more rounds, making thirty-one in all, a draw was agreed to," and the stakes "increased to £25 a-side, the men to fight again in three weeks." In another case, one of the combatants "would have been in better form, but had only just been released from a term of imprisonment." In almost every case we read, "there was no interruption by the police." Surely if the representatives of the Press can become acquainted with these events the police ought to be able to prevent them. It is humiliating enough to know that such barbarism still exists in a Christian land, but it is disgraceful that respectable journals should give it encouragement by inserting favourable reports of such proceedings, and making heroes of men who are defiantly breaking the law. It is high time, too, that the police should make earnest endeavours to stop these acts of brutality, and bring the offenders to justice.

We would remind London readers that Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson resumes his interesting lectures on "Ecclesiastes," at 186, Aldersgate-street, City, next Monday evening, at 8 p.m. All are heartily welcome.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond will give a brief address at the Central Noon Prayer-meeting, 186, Aldersgate-street, every day this week up to and including Friday.

The singleness of eye, and high-toned moral principle which characterised the late Mr. Edward Miall, M.P., secured for him the respect and esteem even of those who differed entirely from his political and ecclesiastical views. The public will therefore receive with satisfaction the memoir of him written by his son Mr. Arthur Miall, and just published by Messrs. Macmillan. He was so long and so prominently connected with a particular school of politicians that the history of the five decades from 1831 to 1881 must necessarily make frequent mention of his name. Many lessons of practical value may be learned from a consideration of Mr. Miall's honourable and honoured career.

As a further mark of the wide-spread increase of interest in the work of evangelisation at home and abroad, it may be noted that a course of lectures on Missions has been arranged to be delivered during the weeks of Advent in Westminster Abbey. On four successive Mondays, from December 1, addresses will be given, on East London Missions, by the Bishop of Bedford; on church work among soldiers, by the Rev. J. C. Edghill, chaplain to the forces at Portsmouth; on a public school Mission, by the Rev. E. Noel Smith; and Central African Missions, by the Rev. Chauncey Maples, of the Universities Mission. It is both timely and wise thus to employ the season which reminds men of the approach of the Lord Jesus Christ. Second Advent truth is never more scripturally dealt with than when it is employed to quicken zeal and stimulate holiness.

The subject to be treated on by the Rev. E. Noel Smith is of deep and vital interest. Our public schools furnish a field for Mission work of a suitable kind, of vast importance, and great promise as to good results. Boys of school age, and placed at school, are too little remembered in relation to the things of Christ. It is supposed by many that they are out of the reach of Christian influence such as is exerted over adults, or children of tender years. But the frankness and eagerness of spirit which characterise the youthful mind form a valuable vantage ground for efforts put forth in the Saviour's name, with a view to winning them over to his side.

One of the strongest and most successful points in the system of church government inaugurated by that prince of organisers, John Wesley, was his employment of individual talents, great or small, in the work of Christ. His ruling principle was that every convert should seek to promote the conversion of others. In addressing a large assembly at Nottingham last week, Mr. S. Morley, M.P., said that he knew of no better method of reaching the careless and neglected multitudes outside the churches than to increase, on the part of church members, the feeling of responsibility in this respect; and urged the necessity for following Wesley's example in giving to every convert some special work to do, by which he should give practical evidence of the change that had taken place in his life.

The sense of personal responsibility greatly needs to be quickened among those who form the membership of the churches; until that is done the work of God at home cannot prosper as we desire it should. The greatest obstacle to progress is found not so much in the indifference and apathy of the masses as the lukewarmness and unconcern of the great bulk of religious professors. How is this to be remedied? The Word of Truth, which is sharper than any two-edged sword, deals trenchantly and closely with this evil. Pastors of churches do wisely to call special attention to such teaching as is found in the Epistles of Christ to the Churches of Asia. For laggard and loitering souls no better teaching can be found than that given in those solemn and practical appeals.

In a recent letter Mr. Moody writes:—

"I am now trying to stir up the Church to active work by holding a Convention of three days in a place. Remember me to all my old friends, and tell them I think of them often, and often long to see them. I am in hopes I will see them at Northfield in good numbers next August, if all is well."

A step in advance in reference to unity of action between Church and Dissent has been taken by the Bishop of Manchester. He has adopted the view that a chapel built on unconsecrated ground in cemeteries is available for use by both parties, and so has just consecrated the Church of England portion of two new cemeteries, where one chapel only exists for use by all denominations. Anything that tends to prevent division of feeling in relation to death and the grave is to be hailed with satisfaction, and tends to bring about closer harmony in life. The enlightened policy of Dr. Fraser will, it is to be hoped, spread widely, and lead to the solution of what is, in many places, a vexed and difficult question.

Mr. Justice Hawkins has just rendered good service to the cause of humanity by his outspoken words in reference to the conduct of certain magistrates in Sussex. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals prosecuted a man for trapping a number of sparrows and sending them in a bag to Pulborough, where they were to be used for the purpose of a starling and sparrow match. The magistrates dismissed the case, on the ground that after the birds were caught they were no longer wild birds coming under the Act, but tame. The Society properly carried the case to a higher court, and Her Majesty's Judges have directed the magistrates to re-try the case, and see that a sentence is passed worthy of the barbarity practised. Country gentlemen who uphold habits of cruelty to animals for the sake of sport are worthy of severest censure and rebuke.

A Prize Competition in Bible study has been started by the Young Women's Christian Association. Particulars may be learned from the pages of Our Own Gazette (S. W. Partridge & Co.). Prizes are offered by Lord Shaftesbury, Lord Kinnaird, Lord Polwarth, and others, for the best selection of passages bearing upon prophetic subjects. The competition will be open to all lady Bible students, and members of Bible classes in town or country. Specially prepared charts are to be used, on which the texts are to be inscribed, the leading topics being the return and restoration of the Jews, and the millennial reign of Christ. Mr. S. Morley, M.P., and Mr. George Williams, have offered special prizes to Young Women's Bible Classes in London, with a view to their special encouragement. It cannot but be productive of good for the minds of the young to be thus turned to these momentous themes.

We commend the article on George Smith, the philanthropist, to the sympathetic attention of our readers. It is better to do justly by a good man while he lives, than to build a monument to him when he is dead.

The Law Journal comments with satisfaction upon the fact that Prince Albert Victor, the eldest son of the Prince of Wales, is about to enter the Middle Temple as a student-at-law. It is a rare occurrence for a royal prince to occupy such a position, and it will doubtless tend to popularise the Inns of Courts as educational institutions. It is also suggested that it may help on the establishment of a Legal University, a step the Lord Chancellor has long desired to see taken.

In view of a possible visitation of cholera in our own land, precautions are being, and ought to be generally, taken, with a view to check and lessen its course. The Ragged School Union has sent out a circular urging the adoption of preventive and precautionary means in connection with its affiliated schools and mission premises. Sanitary rules are furnished, and pecuniary aid offered where means are not adequate to carry out the necessary arrangements. The importance of greater attention to cleanliness and fresh air cannot be too earnestly impressed on the many occupants of dwellings in crowded areas, who come under the influence of district visitors, teachers, or other workers.

The Temperance cause in New Zealand, according to the testimony of Mr. Thomas Spurgeon, is in a very progressive and flourishing condition. In a lecture given at the Metropolitan Tabernacle last week he said:—

"Notwithstanding much drunkenness in Auckland, there is strong reason, looking below the surface, as ministers are often able to do, to believe that temperance principles are making great progress in that distant land. I am glad to say that at picnics, which are very numerous, and on all festive occasions, the Christian people of that place adhere strictly to temperance and teetotal principles. The rising generation take kindly to water as a beverage. Most ministers and Church officers in Auckland are total abstainers. They are privileged with local option and Sunday closing, and at the last election every ward in the city, save one, returned temperance candidates."

Referring to the Maoris, Mr. Spurgeon testified to the great hold total abstinence principles have upon them, large numbers of them being teetotalers. A shameful fact, and one calling for serious condemnation is, that English visitors, who employ the natives in various ways, persistently offer them strong drink, and so hinder a work which is of the greatest value to native interests. Mr. Spurgeon leaves England in about a fortnight for the scene of his labours in Auckland, where we trust he may find great success awaiting him in the Saviour's service, in connection with his new tabernacle.

PENPONDS MISSION ROOM.—For years I entreated the Lord that the children of Penponds might never be educated without Bible teaching. There seemed no way out of the difficulty, as I had no place large enough to hold a school in to meet the Government requirements. Just at the right time the Lord answered my cry by giving me this Mission-room, which many of your readers helped me to build. This room I have used in the evenings for evangelistic meetings, and during the day for a school, teaching in it myself all day for several years, that the children might be brought up in the fear and love of the Lord. It has been wonderfully blessed and prospered, and has become self-supporting, and is now so large that I am compelled to build an additional room at the expense of over £150. Towards this sum £30 has already been given. Any donations to this good work will be thankfully received by me.

THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN.

By T. J. BARNARDO, F.R.C.S.E.

Extracts from a recent Address reported in "Night and Day," for November.

WHO has not heard of "The Bitter Cry of the Outcast Poor"? Doubtless many here have read and been deeply touched by that book. Indeed, I pity the man who calls himself a Christian who can read that little pamphlet without feeling his heart moved almost to breaking with tenderest sympathy for the classes described there.

But there is a deeper depth still. Do you ask, how can that be? I will make my meaning clear; the houses and alleys and rookeries, where the wretched people who are depicted in its graphic story live, can be visited and described, even by the author of that book; but those to whom I refer are beyond the reach of any visitor, for they are the vast multitudes of poor children who with their parents have no home, and who have never known one, who either find a shelter for a night or two in a lodging-house or casual ward, or have to lie down for the night in the parks, in the street, or in the doorways of fetid, pestiferous house, in the lowest courts and alleys. Only imagine the sufferings, the degradation of those unfortunate men, women and children who have passed years of such a life.

Come with me to our own Home where in Stepney we receive and shelter homeless children, who every day and night seek our doors. Stand by me for a moment. I am writing in an inner room, and there comes a tap at the door, and one of my helpers calls me earnestly: "You must come out." I go out, and there I see in the large receiving-room a woman standing with three children. The woman—it does not require many words to describe who and what she is—her life appears to be that of a tramp. Her whole appearance is wretched in the extreme. Look at the three children—all girls. They are clothed in rags; neither shoes nor stockings on their feet; the head of one only is covered, the other two are not. But the worst of it is that it is intolerable even to stand near them; the dreadful odour arising from their neglected condition makes it hardly possible to maintain conversation with them.

But I have a few brief words with the mother. What is their story? That woman and her husband for fourteen years lived together as man and wife, and never for one week had they had a roof of their own over their heads. That is the absolute truth. The father is now dead. The children were all born in the workhouse, which the mother left as soon after their birth as she was able to continue the same wretched wandering life. Thus they had never known what "home" was, even of the poorest or most squalid sort. These are the "outcast" poor, if you will.

Now, look again at these girls. I am glad to see so many ladies present, and I would earnestly beseech them to think over the probable future which lies before these girls if not rescued at once. One of the children is, I should judge, thirteen years of age; another is seven, and a third is five. What have they been doing recently? They have wandered about without a home; they have slept at night in the parks, except on one or two occasions, when people had pitied and given them pence, and then they have gone into common lodging-houses, and rested their weary bodies till morning came. Thus these girls have, with their parents, not only been exposed to the cruelest deprivations when in the streets, but even in the shelter they sought ran greater risks, being brought into contact with men and women of the vilest life, and of the worst character. The very last lodging-house they were in, an awful den, was under the shadow of a church, the minister of which is a man of God whose voice you have often heard in this place. But now their case had become desperate. The woman said the children were half-starved; she herself was footsore; they had no place to rest in of late, and had spent last night walking about.

What was to be done? Her desperate question was: "Will you take them in or not?" Well, we consented; yes, we took them in at once, and we inquired into their case afterwards, feeling that if we let them go, even for an hour, these three poor waifs might slip through our hands and be lost to us. And, let me add, that it very frequently will not do to inquire first, and to keep cases out while we inquire, and visit, and question. All that process is of course urgently needful and must be done, and in the majority of cases should be done, before the reception of the applicants, but there are exceptional cases of peculiar urgency when prompt, immediate measures will alone save a life, and this seemed such an one.

Language fails me to describe the experiences through which we found these poor children had passed. Talk about the heathen! Could their condition be worse? What did they know? They had never read one word—they could not read one word of the Bible; they had never even heard its words read; they had never sung a hymn; they had never knelt in prayer—absolutely never bowed their heads in prayer. But they had learnt much else, fatal knowledge, that if not quickly plucked out by the roots, would produce an awful harvest. I ask any of you here to tell me what hope on God's earth was there of saving such children from the most terrible fate if they continued in that condition.

I put it to you, and I hope you will continue to put it to yourselves, as one of the mysterious problems of our complex life which demands a solution at our hands, What crime or fault had these poor children committed that they should have been for so long abandoned thus by society and by Christ's Church? Can you think on their misery unmoved? Yet what had these children done? They were guilty of no fault worthy of such a fate; yet they had been so utterly neglected, so certainly left to perish, or to grow up viciously, that it might be said of them, "No man careth for their soul." They doubtless reaped in bitterness the results of their parents' faults; but surely they ought to have been laid hold of before.

Well, through God's grace we were able to take them in without delay; and they were sent right away down to our sweet Village Home in the country, and there, under influence of what I cannot help calling a Christian Home Mission in the highest sense of the term, under the power, too, of teaching conveyed not in words only, but illustrated by the lives of those who love Christ, and for Christ's sake are prepared to love his little ones,—there they felt, for the first time, the gentle influences of a pure and a peaceful home. That such work is not without trial or disappointment I need hardly say; but it has also its blessed and cheering side. See what has come of this one case so far. If some of you had been down last Sunday in the Village Home, where my dear friend who presides over that institution was ministering to his young flock, and had looked out for these three children, where would they have been found, and what doing? See if you can recognise their once gaunt, famished faces, and their wolfish, hungry eyes, in any members of that childish congregation. See if you can even pick them out of that group of neat-looking, happy little girls, standing with a company of others in the children's service, and singing some such sweet hymn as this:

"Around the throne of God in heaven
Thousands of children stand,
Children whose sins are all forgiven,
A holy, happy band."

Ah, no indeed you cannot, for already the dear home life has worked mighty changes, so much so, indeed, that if even the three were pointed out to you, you would hardly believe they could ever have been such as I have here described.

Go out to the heathen with Christ's love in your hearts, and speak his Word there. Yes, go forth to China and live and speak for Jesus there; and may the Divine blessing be on all his servants thus going forth! But let none of us for one moment forget that at our door—not 1000 miles away, but at our very door—are the heathen also; those poor perishing neglected little ones for whom Christ died, and whom He has given as a sacred charge to his Church. Yes, thousands of neglected children in this great city lie at our very doors, and their sad voices go up in a piteous and "exceeding bitter cry" to our God and Father. Shall we not heed that cry, and shall not our arms be swift to deliver and strong to save?

"But these others—children small,
Spilt like blots about the City,
Quay, and street, and palace wall—
Take them up into your pity!"

MISSION WORK IN CAPE TOWN.

DEAR SIR,—Soon after my last letter was written, telling you of the needs of English working-men and others in this town, a building came into our hands which will meet all the requirements of the work we wish to extend. The situation could not be better, in a crowded neighbourhood of English-speaking working people. Last Sunday evening many were drawn to the Gospel meeting. They seemed loth to go away; wistful, earnest faces, ebony and brown negresses, with neat white handkerchiefs pinned round their heads, barefooted Malay lads, English mechanics, and our own contingent of red-coats from the Soldiers' Home.

There are numbers of souls to be gathered in, and we must prepare for the blessing. Who will come to the help of the Lord? Who will share in the precious spoil? The Mission building is for sale; we can secure it for something under £500. As much again would put another storey on it, and provide reading and coffee rooms for our poor working men who are being ruined by the public-houses and gambling places in the town. We know not how to reach them, as there is not a single coffee-room in the town to which to invite them. We preach the Gospel and Temperance to them, and are forced to leave them in the midst of their temptations and wretched surroundings. Think of the pain and the shame of passing in the street a young man, the face plainly saying "not very long from home," bare-headed, bare-footed, on the verge of delirium tremens—sport for a black crowd—not much of a crowd, for the sight, alas! is common. Can we not save them?

We have been cheered and helped by a short visit from Mr. Henry Maynard, of Wimbledon, and his addresses at the Soldiers' Home, at the afternoon gatherings of ladies chiefly, were much enjoyed. He also addressed some of the soldiers on their return from the Natal frontier at a tea, to which a large number came. Mr. Maynard will kindly give any information which may be desired regarding the work. Any help towards the purchase of the mission building, or towards the current expenses of the present home, and of the Sailors' Rest, should be sent to Miss. A. Gurney, 12, Camden-hill-road, Gipsy-hill, S.E., Hon. Sec.

Yours very truly,
M. S. Osborne.

The Soldiers' Home, Cape Town, Oct. 29.

WEST-END WORKERS IN THE EAST-END.—Now that the East London Church Mission is over many of the workers may wish they could keep some link between themselves and the districts where they have worked, and yet are unable to spare time or travelling expenses for constant intercourse. Could not the Temperance Societies in the East-end supply this link? Our children's Bands of Hope would only take one afternoon weekly or fortnightly, and are much needing workers. In some parishes there is no such organisation commenced because no one has offered to commence it, and in others where the work is already established the numbers in attendance would be doubled if the staff of good workers were enlarged. The Parent Society would gladly aid any fresh work contemplated in this direction.—Yours faithfully,

S. Ursula Gardner,

YOUNG WOMEN AT KING'S CROSS.

THE friends and members of the King's Cross Branch of the Y.W.C.A. met, by invitation of Miss Morley and the Committee, to celebrate their eighth anniversary on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 19. Mr. SAMUEL MORLEY, M.P., took the chair.

An interesting sketch of the work carried on at the institute was given by Miss MALDEN, the resident superintendent. During the two years it has been open nearly 200 members have been gathered in. Many have left this locality, but a correspondence is maintained with most of them. The various Gospel and prayer-meetings have been well attended. Many strangers have been brought in and have heard the good news of salvation, and a large number have told of blessed results. There is also regular and systematic visitation of the sick and absent members.

Mr. MORLEY referred to the Royal Commission on the Dwellings of the Poor, of which he was a member, as bringing out the appalling need of the poor of London; and especially of the girls brought up in such homes and turned adrift in London to earn their livelihood. These were, he supposed, invited to take advantage of such institutes as this. We men must stand by such work. It is a disgrace to the Christian public that such a valuable work as that carried on here should ever languish for want of funds. It is absolutely frightful to hear of the manner in which so many people live now, and this renders it necessary that such true Homes as these should be provided in every district. My heart is very full of the subject. I am persuaded that this Institute is doing a noble work, and those who labour in it should not be allowed to suffer pecuniary anxiety.

Mr. T. A. DENNY said that perhaps one of the most appalling problems of the present day is the low wages paid for female labour. He knew cases where a woman working at home and providing her own needle and thread could only make two shillings for sixteen hours' labour.

Rev. W. SMITH warmly commended the work of the Association, as also did Rev. C. B. SAWDAY. The latter said he had watched the work of the Percy Institute for the last two years. Only last Sunday evening groups of workers went out and asked permission to hold short services in some of the rooms whose inmates never attend a place of worship. In five houses a short meeting was held, and some of the hearers were moved to tears made by the earnest appeals of these Y.W.C.A. members.

Hon. A. KINNAIRD specially referred to the need of funds. The Percy Institute, costing only £200 a year, was dependent on the central fund, and they greatly desired to see friends in the neighbourhood supporting it.

Rev. Dr. DYKES spoke of the vast increase of female labour, which had come on the public so rapidly that little or nothing had been done to protect the thousands of girls who flock to town to seek employment. It was a disgrace to the Church that while so much had been done for young men the young women had been so neglected.

The CHAIRMAN promised to give £150 towards extending the premises, and he urgently pressed on the workers to go forward without delay.

Some of the friends remained for the evening meeting, which was extremely interesting; the room was filled with eager, happy faces, the young women hurrying in after their day's toil was over, to celebrate the happy anniversary. Addresses were given by various ladies during the evening. One of the special features of the work carried on at the Percy Institute is the quiet, continuous flow of spiritual blessing that has followed the classes and meetings held within its walls.

CRIPPLED BOYS' HOME, KENSINGTON.—The sum of two hundred guineas has been voted as a donation to this institution by the Court of Common Council of the City of London.

CLAPTON PARK THEATRE.—Professor André's Alpine Choir gave a Service of Sacred Song at this Theatre on Sunday last, on which occasion the building was crowded to its utmost capacity.

THE GOSPEL IN CONVICT PRISONS.

SIR,—Will you allow me the opportunity of calling the attention of the public to the very serious neglect of prisoners in the convict establishments of this country, in respect of matters affecting the salvation of the soul? I was unfortunately an inmate of one of these large prisons for some years, and although a large and expensive religious and educational staff is kept up at the expense of the nation, I can testify that, for a period of at least five years, no good was effected, and no religious influences roused. On the contrary, the very mode of executing the ministerial office was so repulsive to the prison inmates, that the very entrance of the Chaplain into the chapel to commence the service, or into a hospital ward to read the prayers to the sick, was the signal for oaths and imprecations and obscene expressions, and these, of course, quite unfitted the minds of the seriously inclined minority for the reception of the Word preached.

On several occasions I expostulated with a Scripture reader on the haste, the indecent haste, and irreverent manner of conducting the various services of the Church, and he told me distinctly that he believed that the discipline authorities would be quite satisfied not to have any religious service whatever. Certain it is that ten minutes is the strictly limited time every day, and three-quarters of an hour every Sunday, for Divine service.

A prison is, or should be, a reformatory. Why not begin to interest the men with matters affecting their immortal souls? Why is it that the reading of one of Mr. Moody's sermons in the hospital, or the singing of one or two of Mr. Sankey's hymns, should do more good than all the regulation lumber? I have seen men in tears while singing Sankey's hymns in prison.

There are hundreds of men capable and desirous to receive Christ and to welcome Him, and to be his now and for evermore; but the mode of service and the style of men selected as chaplains is all against this. They may be gentlemen—perhaps graduates—but in one important instance I know the Chaplain is only what is called a literati, and his theology is so bad that he makes himself laughed at by his attempts to explain the deep mysteries of Daniel and Revelation, instead of preaching as Mr. Moody does, to the heart.

Oh, pray help these poor wanderers; do try to procure for them an evangelist who will teach them of the love of a Father, of the blood of a Mediator, and the sanctifying influence of a Holy Spirit, to guide them into all truth.

I trust you will not refuse to insert this appeal from one of themselves, but help them by ventilating the subject.—Yours respectfully,

AN EX-PRISONER.

[Evidently our correspondent's description must not be taken to have a universal application. There are chaplains who are devoted servants of Christ and wise winners of souls; we fear there are also those who answer to the description given above.—ED.]

MR. S. MORLEY ON "REACHING THE MASSES."—Mr. S. Morley, M.P., addressed a gathering at Nottingham last week, and threw out suggestions for reaching the masses of the people by the religious bodies. It has been his privilege to be a member of the Commission to inquire into the housing of the poor, and the extent of the information which had reached that Commission as to the physical and moral conditions under which thousands of people in London were living would appal this meeting. Those people must be reached somehow, and he knew of no better method than increasing in their churches a strong impression of the necessity of following to some extent the example of John Wesley, who gave to every convert to Methodism some special work to do, by which he or she should give practical evidence of the change that had taken place in his or her life. He did not believe in dogmatism, but in kindly, gentle advice and practical sympathy. He could not help alluding to the drinking habits of the people as one of the greatest hindrances to the spread of religion, and he hoped the day would soon come when every one of their ministers would be a total abstainer.

THE CRY FOR CHRIST.

A CRY goes up 'neath the stars of God
From a multitude treading the downward road,
Night by night as the gin palace fills,
Where thousands dream they can drown their ills;
Night by night as the ghastly throng
Of young immortals, all sold to wrong,
Sold to misery, shame and sin,
Pass in and out, pass out and in.
What is the outcast's bitter cry?
What is the sound that ascends on high?
'Tis a wail of lost souls, to hell's brink enticed,
'Tis a cry for the Gospel, a cry for Christ.

Brothers in Christ, who wait and pray
For the golden dawn of millennial day,
Work for it! Forth to the war with sin!
Go seek to gather those outcasts in.
Sisters in Christ, will ye shrink from the touch
Of the sin-degraded, or care for such,
As Christ the Lord? Ah! their shame and pain
On your womanhood is a deadly stain.
Help to remove it by love, by prayer,
Oh! make the outcast your special care. [bands
Seek his strength, who commanded to loose the
From the grave-bound Lazarus' feet and hands.

Do you answer, "These sinners will not hear,
They are dead to hope, or shame, or fear;
Vain 'tis to seek them, to strive, or plead,
Within their breasts is no sense of need;
The ribald oath, and the brutal jest,
Will meet our efforts the most and best"?
Oh! brothers, sisters, the heart's dumb ache,
The thirst that no draughts of sin can slake,
Are theirs. Believe, 'tis a bitter cry [high.
For the Water of Life, for the Light from on
Their need is urgent, 'tis unsufficed, [Christ.
Go, give them the Gospel, go, point them to LAURA L. MCL. BACKLER.

MRS. AMANDA SMITH.

A LETTER, dated Oct. 21, has been received from Mrs. Amanda Smith by Mrs. Davies Foxrock, co. Dublin; the following extracts will be read with interest:—

"I am thankful to say that I have been tolerably well now for the last three months, only slight attacks of chills and fever. At times I have been working very hard. We have just closed a very successful camp meeting, commencing Sep. 3, and continuing ten days. The Lord was with his people in the tented forest of palm-trees, a beautiful spot. The power of the Lord was mightily displayed, and many dear souls were brought out of darkness into light. The Lord answered prayer in a most wonderful manner. 'Praise God from whom all blessings flow.'

"I feel that the appointment of Bishop Wm. Taylor to Africa is of God, and there are signs of a better day dawning for dark Africa—for this republic, at least. Bishop Taylor refuses any salary from the American Mission Board, and supports himself; that of itself will be a blessing to the people of this country. His whole heart is filled with love for the poor natives, and he is willing to make every sacrifice for their help and salvation.

"I shall be careful to use the money you sent me in the fear of God, and with a single eye to his glory. I am staying with a very kind family. God is so good and faithful; it is wonderful how my little needs are supplied. Please thank all the dear friends who gave the £20. May God give them of his richest blessing, and multiply their seed sown.

"Greenville, Sinoe co., Liberia."

Mrs. Davies is still willing to take charge of further subscriptions, or of useful articles, books, &c., to fill a large box for Mrs. Amanda Smith.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—Dec. 7, Rev. iv. 1—11; Dec. 8, Rev. v. 1—14; Dec. 9, Rev. vi. 1—17; Dec. 10, Rev. vii. 9—17; Dec. 11, Rev. xix. 6—16; Dec. 12, Rev. xx. 1—15; Dec. 13, Rev. xxi. 1—14.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

Cannes.—A Home for female servants out of place has been opened here.

The new President of the American Bible Society is the Secretary of State, Mr. Frelinghuysen. His uncle, the Hon. Theodore Frelinghuysen, held it for many years.

Working Class Thrift in New South Wales.—During 1883, the number of deposits in the Post-office Savings Banks was 147,627, representing £922,803. This is exclusive of the large sums deposited in other Savings Banks, or invested in Land or Building Societies.

Hamburg.—A good Christian work going on in this city. Fourteen Y.M.C.A.'s are under the care of the City Mission. Baron Von Oertzen has a prayer-meeting in his house weekly for the outpouring of Divine power upon all the churches and people, and Missions everywhere.

The Boston Pastors, says the New York Evangelist, are settling down to hard and persistent work with a zeal quickened by the recent associational meetings and the Moody gatherings. The same result will doubtless follow the meetings now under way in New York State, and to be held as far west as Detroit, by Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

Berlin.—Christian work in this city, says a visitor, is steadily progressing. There are meetings at the Y.M.C.A. every night, and the Gospel preached in many parts of the city. A new Y.M.C.A. is in course of formation at Hamburg. Mr. F. Schlümbeck and Baron Von Roth Risch are there. There are two training institutes for missionaries in the city.

Recent letters received from a seaman on H.M. ship Opal, on the West Coast of Africa, speak of a work of grace having sprung up amongst the men. There are about 250 on board the vessel, which is on a four years' station duty. The writer says: "We have one man in the ship who was one of the worst of characters, but now he will stand up bravely for Christ. We often have to make a stand on the forecastle. We have our little Bible-class. Most of the mariners are total abstainers."

Japan.—At the close of last year a young Japanese Christian was imprisoned at Tokio, for having too freely expressed his liberal opinions. In the prison he explained the Gospel, especially to one man, who became a Christian and was most eager for further instruction. Other prisoners gradually gathered round him until the young Hara had a congregation of 300, to whom he preached salvation through Jesus Christ. On being liberated Hara brought to the knowledge of the authorities the miserable condition of the prisoners, which ended by his being appointed Governor of a new prison with full liberty to teach and practise the principles of Christianity.—Le Chrétien Belge.

South Africa.—In the unsettled state of affairs in South Africa, it is pleasant to read of a peaceful and joyous holiday fête. A Y.M.C.A. has been formed in Lessonto, at Thaba-Bossion, and at Maboulela. About fifty have joined, the rules requiring a promise to abstain from every bad word and wicked action. August 9 being the 70th anniversary of the birth of M. Keck, one of the missionaries, it was decided that the two branches should meet at Maboulela. In the evening the Christians met around the Lord's table. Next day a meeting was again held, when several of the young men spoke, and many of the heathen desired the prayers of the congregation. Early the next morning they separated, promising each other a similar meeting at Thaba-Bossion next year.—Journal des Missions.

The Gibraltar Purity Crusade.—The ten days' purity crusade, conducted by Mr. J. B. Wookey, was brought to a close on November 14, when a crowded audience, principally soldiers, listened attentively to an address on "Immoral Men." Many striking incidents were related, in order to show that those who sow to the flesh reap even in this life a terrible harvest of corruption. A letter of earnest pleading was read from Mrs. Josephine Butler, on behalf of the women of England, and we trust was not read in vain. The Bishop, who presided, said he fully agreed with what the lecturer said about vice being "a necessity," and denounced in no measured terms such a mistaken idea. He expressed his great pleasure at being present, and also his hearty sympathy with the purity work. We are looking prayerfully forward, says a Gibraltar correspondent, to the Temperance Mission of the Rev. J. W. Horsley, M.A., of Clerkenwell, which is to take place here, early in December. A number of purity pledges were taken by soldiers during Mr. Wookey's Mission.—The Sentinel.

Tonkin.—The British and Foreigh Bible Society has given 1300 portions of Holy Scripture to the French troops.

Scripture Readers for Highlanders in Egypt.—It is proposed, says the Inverness Courier, to send two Army Scripture readers to join the Highland Brigade under Lord Wolseley. As the troops highly appreciate the services of the readers, who, as is well known in the army, devote themselves energetically to their work both in the camp, the field, and in hospital, it is to be hoped that the public will help in meeting the expenses of sending them out. The Army Scripture Readers' Society have no funds applicable to this special purpose, but appeal to all those who take an interest in the comfort of the Highland soldier when employed on a most arduous service. Any subscriptions, large or small, will be gratefully received by Captain Roderick Mackenzie, secretary of the Society, 5, St. Andrew-square Edinburgh.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Sandown, Isle of Wight.—Mrs. W. E. Legg has held a ten days' Mission here in connection with the Y.W.C.A. There has been much to praise God for, in souls brought out of darkness into light, and in the leading of Christians to fuller consecration. A free tea was given one evening in the Town Hall to those who never attend any place of worship. Mrs. Legg gave an evangelistic address after the tea.

Brierley Hill.—I have engaged a large room in the principal street of Brierley-hill for Gospel and Temperance addresses. It is situate in the Black Country, amongst iron workers, miners, and fire-brick makers. George King is conducting evangelistic services, and the Lord is blessing his efforts. We should like him to continue his labours if the Lord's stewards would send us help.

Thomas Whitehouse, Minister.

Hanwell.—Messrs. Mateer and Parker have completed a fortnight's Mission here. The meetings have been well attended, and the power and presence of the Holy Spirit have been felt. Many have turned to the Lord, and the good work continues; a few Christians have re-consecrated themselves to the service of the Lord. The children's services were evidently much blessed of God. Truly it has been a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

Bridlington.—Mr. J. Cleworth, of the Evangelisation Society, commenced a Mission here on Sunday, Nov. 2, and it lasted for three weeks. This is the third that has been held in Bridlington by Mr. Cleworth during the past four years, and each one has been most successful. Two halls were engaged, one in the old town for the first two weeks, and the other on the Quay for the last week. Night after night the people came well. Many were the requests for prayer and praise. The word was with great power, and many souls were blessed and saved. Mr. Cleworth is an able and winning speaker, and his labour will not be in vain. The clergy and ministers took part in the services, and it was a time of refreshing to all.—F. C. B.

Y.M.C.A., Shrewsbury.—A special Gospel Mission for ten days has been conducted here in the Music-hall, by Mr. Henry Thorne. It has been attended with great blessing. We believe scores of young people have turned to the Lord. Some seasons will, we think, never be forgotten for power and solemnity, especially the one when young women were addressed, the subject being "The Perils of a Young Woman." Many hearts were melted, and tears shed and souls saved. One pleasing result of the Mission was seen the day after the Mission closed. The employés in the largest drapery establishment (employing about one hundred hands) invited Mr. Thorne to give them an address in one of their show-rooms, which was very heartily placed at their disposal by the principals.

A WORKING MEN'S CLUB AND INSTITUTE is now being formed in connection with the Royal Victoria Hall and Coffee Tavern. The object of the Club is social and educational recreation, genial intercourse, and pleasant companionship; also to form a centre for Friendly and Building Societies and kindred Institutions, whose good work is too often marred by their connection with the public-house. Gifts of books would be gladly received. I shall be glad to answer any inquiries, and to receive names for membership.

R. W. Bower.

MR. SPENCER WALTON AT WESTON.

A MOST happy mission, conducted by Mr. Spencer Walton, has just closed in the parish of Christchurch, Weston-super-Mare. By the lips of his servant the Lord has fed us day by day with "the finest of the wheat," as we assembled in our Mission-room for Bible readings on "Things Touching the King." Each evening the room has been crowded for an evangelistic service, at which deeply earnest pleadings with those who were unsaved, won many souls for Christ. Several addresses were also given to young people, with blessed results.

Our hearts are very full of praise for what the Lord has done in our midst. Will your readers praise Him with us, and pray for the young converts, and for the Christians who have been led more fully to consecrate themselves and their all to the Lord?

Colin Campbell, Vicar of Christ Church.

OBITUARY.

REV. J. A. ASTON, DEPTFORD.

WE deeply regret to announce the death of Rev. J. A. Aston, the beloved pastor of St. John's Church, Deptford, and formerly of St. Luke's, Cheltenham, which occurred at the Vicarage on Wednesday evening last. The cause of his death was nervous prostration, brought about by excessive devotion to his work. The rev. gentleman had just entered on his fifty-eighth year, and had been nearly thirty years in the ministry. The funeral took place on Monday afternoon at the Brockley Cemetery.

DEAN LAW, GLOUCESTER.

The Dean of Gloucester died on the morning of Tuesday, 25th ult., at the Deanery, Gloucester, in his 87th year. He passed away very quietly, having been unconscious some hours before his death. Dr. Law was appointed to the deanery by Lord Palmerston in 1862. He was very decidedly Evangelical, and his counsel, like that of the late Dean Close, was much sought by members of his party. Of late years the Dean had resided a great deal at Bournemouth. Dean Law's earnest preaching led many to the Cross. But probably his most effective service in the cause of Christ lay in the production of the striking series of tracts, "Christ is All;" in which the Gospel is traced in the narratives and journeyings of the Pentateuch. The short, telling, epigrammatic rendering touched the hearts of many of those into whose hands the tractates fell.

REV. HENRY DOWSON.

The death, in his seventy-third year, is announced, of Rev. Henry Dowson, for many years one of the leading ministers of the Baptist denomination in Yorkshire. He was pastor of the Westgate Church, Bradford, from 1836 to 1866, when he was called to undertake the office of President of the Baptist Theological Institution, founded in the latter year at Bury, Lancashire. This institution was in 1874 removed to a new building in Rusholme, Manchester. Mr. Dowson retired from the presidency in 1878, and has since resided in the north of London. In 1881 he filled the office of President of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland. He was an eloquent preacher and a sound scholar, and widely esteemed throughout the Baptist Churches of the North of England. His later years were employed in ministering to a congregation gathered under his labours at Crouch Hill, N. Three weeks ago he was knocked down and his ankle injured by a parcel van as he was alighting from an omnibus at King's-cross Station, and the shock he then sustained brought on an illness which terminated fatally.

CONVALESCENT HOME, ST. LEONARD'S-ON-SEA.—Dear Sir,—May I say a few words on behalf of the Home which Miss Heath has tried to form at 2, Springfield-terrace. I have visited her for some time, and can speak most highly of the kind care which she has given to the children placed under her supervision. The house is situated in a healthy part of St. Leonard's. Miss Heath does everything in her power to promote the comfort and happiness of those placed under her care.

GEORGE SMITH, PHILANTHROPIST.

THE world has an odd way of rewarding its benefactors. From the beginning it has been thus. It poisoned Socrates, burned Huss, blinded Galileo, and threw him into the dungeons of the Inquisition; while Columbus was placed in irons, and died a beggar. To-day we do not deal quite so vigorously with our worthies. They are neither expatriated nor put to death, excepting in the case of John Brown and a few too heroic heroes of that stamp. Instead of martyring them, our fashion is to starve them. Every one remembers Carlyle's famous outburst, "Fair day's wages for a fair day's work! Alas! in what corner of this planet, since Adam first awoke on it, was that ever realised?" Carlyle used as illustrations the wages allotted to Milton and Cromwell, but Mr. Froude's fascinating account of the Chelsea sage supplies a more modern instance. Until the appearance of his "Frederick the Great," Mr. Carlyle never received more for his literary labours than £150 per annum, a sum which the London Champion Comique realises without difficulty in a single fortnight. More recent still, and even more to the point, is this case of George Smith, of Coalville. Thirty thousand children, living in the worse than Egyptian bondage of the brickyards, owed their exodus to this modern Moses, twice that number have been rescued from the miserable life on board the canal boats, and as a reward for his unwearying labour and heroic self-sacrifice, George Smith has been left to suffer such absolute privation as to render it necessary to grant him £300 from the Royal Bounty Fund in order to save him from immediate destitution.

The story of the life of this remarkable philanthropist is simple, but inspiring. Himself the son of a poor bricklayer, George Smith was in 1838, at the age of seven, earning his living as one of the little serfs of the brickyard, whose cause he afterwards pleaded with a force which could only come from one who knew by personal experience what a child's life in a brickyard really meant. The work allotted to the children—mere babes, some of four or five years—was to carry the lumps of clay from the heap on the table to where the bricks are made. It was no rare thing to see a little child toiling under the weight of forty pounds of clay, and this was done for thirteen or fourteen hours a day, with occasional night work, by which might be realised the sum of sixpence. As year after year the boy toiled on he earned many a sixpence by walking fourteen miles and carrying a total load of some five tons of clay every night of extra work. These sixpences were spent in books, which were in his rare leisure moments the boy's one great source of amusement and instruction.

The knowledge thus gained, fragmentary though it was, enabled George Smith later on to become the manager of a brickyard in one of the Midland counties. Here he had still daily before his eyes the slaving children, stunted in body and mind, and here it was where his philanthropic work was first begun. The immediate result of his efforts to lighten the load weighing down the young shoulders was that his situation was taken from him. But undaunted by adverse circumstances, he worked on with unswerving persistency and undaunted enthusiasm, trusting to Providence for his bread—which, to do Providence justice, never absolutely failed him; poor, lonely, friendless, only half educated, the penniless enthusiast made his voice ring throughout the country, and, marvel of marvels, succeeded at last in compelling an overworked Legislature to pass no fewer than three Acts of Parliament.

Long years of hard, patient toil—and too often of bitter disappointment—went by before at last, in 1871, the Brickyards Act was passed, and some thirty thousand children were rescued from their cruel drudgery and sent to school. This achievement, however, did not satisfy him; it rather stimulated him to fresh exertions. The nomad children of the canal, many of whom came under George Smith's daily notice, knew of no friend until he took up their cause. This he did with a will, and worked with might and main to relieve them from the atmosphere of brutality and ignorance which fills the 6ft. square cabin of the canal boat. Of the difficulties and obstacles which had to be overcome, few can have any adequate idea. Had George Smith spent his years in the pursuit of some selfish end, he could not have met with greater indifference or a more chilling apathy from many of those who pride themselves on their philanthropy. He found many friends, however, and by dint of persistently writing to the papers, interviewing members, and worrying round everywhere, he succeeded at last, in 1877, in getting the Canal Boats Act passed.

By this measure Parliament afforded to 60,000 canal boat children the opportunity of acquiring an education hitherto entirely out of their reach. It was, however, inadequate, and for another seven years he set to work secure its amendment. The task seemed impossible, especially last year; but, at the close of last session, as the result of another seven years' work, the Canal Boat Act was amended, and the two Acts of Parliament, in reality the Acts of George Smith, are now in force. Meanwhile, in the midst of his exertions for others, the philanthropist had taken no heed for himself and his own family, and their condition was often very distressing. When the amending Act was passed it was hoped that the inspectorship it created might have been conferred on the man who was practically its author, who knew every clause and every word of it by heart, and was better acquainted with the canal population than perhaps any other man in the kingdom. The inspectorship would not only have been some reward for a whole life's work, but it would simply have been giving a suitable post to a most competent man.

But George Smith had no electioneering claims, and in his stead the inspectorship was assigned to another who was at one time the agent of a canal boat owner. This case of appointing the cat to watch the cream, into the obscurity of which proceeding we will not now seek to inquire, was a blow to Mr. Smith, the harder because his third great work of philanthropy, the rescue of the gipsy children, had to be abandoned until again some means of subsistence had been found. George Smith is now a white-haired man; of the £300 granted from the Royal Bounty not much will be left after his debts are paid and his "bits of things" once more brought back to his home. There is no sign that he will obtain suitable employment by which to gain a livelihood; he is too advanced in years, and by his mode of life altogether unfitted to return to manual labour; how, then, is George Smith to be provided for?

Some years ago efforts were made to procure a grant for him from the Civil List, but, sad to say, efforts in George Smith's favour have hitherto been wanting in energy, and the grant was not made. The £300 now granted will be a very godsend, but it will not go far. The question now arises whether a public subscription should not be raised not only to place this remarkable man beyond the reach of monetary anxiety for the rest of his days, but to leave him free to carry out the work no one but himself seems willing to take in hand. The reward of philanthropy such as his should certainly not be literal starvation, and men of his disinterested enthusiasm and capacity for philanthropic work should at least be allowed their rations. Even convicts have as much as that.—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE BOARD MEN AT THE CATTLE SHOW.—We are purposing again to give (free of charge) a pint of good, hot soup and one pound of bread each to the advertising board-men and match sellers, &c., who parade our neighbourhood by hundreds during Cattle Show week. Last year, at Sermon-lane Mission Hall, over 1800 pints of soup and 1800 pounds of bread during the week were given to these half-starved creatures. We are quite without funds for the dinners, but we feel we shall not appeal in vain to a Christian public.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For blessing on a third Mission held at Bridlington by Mr. Joseph Cleworth, of the Evangelisation Society.

PRAYER.—For blessing on Gospel services in villages near Norwich, by Mr. John Elliott.——That a Sister engaged in Zenana work in India may be a great blessing there.——For the mentally afflicted wife of an aged clergyman, that she may be restored to health and home.——One asks for prayer that he may be entirely delivered from the bondage of sin, and enabled to tell of the love of Jesus.——For a fortnight's Gospel services in Manchester, by Mr. Henry Lakin.——For blessing upon a Y.M.C.A. Mission to be conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne, at Duffield, Derbyshire, Dec. 13 to 22.——That God would keep a young clergyman from being led astray through worldly companionship.——For the conversion of an officer sadly given to drink.——For Gospel services by Mr. Opie Rodway, at Littledean, Gloucestershire.——For a revival of the Lord's work in the island of Alderney.——For the conversion of a brother in a terribly despondent state of mind.

GOSPEL WORK ON THE CONTINENT.

AT the invitation of the Hon. Mr. and Mrs. ARTHUR KINNAIRD, a number of friends assembled at their residence, South Audley-street, on Friday afternoon, to meet a deputation from the Evangelical Society of Geneva, composed of Professor Barde, Mons. Bossi, and Mons. F. Necker. The meeting was presided over by Mr. Kinnaird. After cordially welcoming the friends present, he said he thought it right that while much evangelistic work was being done at home, we should extend our sympathy and help to those on the Continent, who so greatly need it. Spiritual blessing in our own souls is intimately connected with the propagation of truth to others, and those who restrain it are themselves the losers.

The first address was given in French by Mons. F. NICKER. Mons. BOSSI followed, with a statement concerning the Colportage work, which he said is mainly done in France. Their work in France was of great importance, because the selling of their religious books paved the way for the sale of God's Word. Mons. Bossi showed in a lucid manner that the special claims of the Society rested on the fact that Geneva was the head-quarters of Protestant speaking countries on the Continent; that is why it is the object of much hostility from Rome.

The Theological College department was represented by Professor ED. BARDE, who compared their Society to a tree having three branches, viz., the Evangelistic, the Colportage, and the Theological. Confining his remarks to the latter branch, he said the College was necessary for the training of pastors, many of whom become located in France and Belgium, as well as Geneva. The converts produced by Missions like Mr. MacAll's have need of pastors to teach and instruct them. True there are training colleges for ministers in Geneva, but their preaching is cold, and lacking in evangelical fervour. We want to continue and to perpetuate the school of divinity, which was founded by Merle D'Aubigné. We want ministers who are born again, and who can say, "I know in whom I have believed." We have now fifty-two students in our College, but could send out a great many more if we had funds sufficient for training.

Rev. L. B. WHITE, of the Religious Tract Society, urged the claims of the Society, having seen its working when on the Continent. Mr. D. Matheson also hoped the friends present would do all in their power to help on the work.

MISSIONARY TRAINING.—A paper read by Miss Mason, of Kilburn, on "The Preparation and Training of Women for Medical and other Missions," appears at length in the December number of The House of Rest Monthly. Copies can be had for a penny each, post free, from Miss Mason, of Cambridge-gardens, Kilburn-park, N.W.

SIR ANDREW CLARK ON HEALTH, KNOWLEDGE & RELIGION.

THE enterprise of the friends who hold the reins of office at 186, Aldersgate-street, cannot be questioned. If the young men who congregate there are not fully equipped for the great business walks of life, and cheered on as they tread its devious pathways, the fault will not lie with the Secretary and his counsellors. What do we find? We find that for instruction in the leading branches of secular knowledge, capable and earnest-minded men are at the head of the classes. No less capable and earnest evangelists are on hand to exhort and persuade to a personal and practical acceptance of Him who is "the Way, the Truth, and the Life." Of learned doctors there is no lack. Is not a Doctor of Divinity expounding the ancient writings of the converted "sceptic preacher," as recorded in Ecclesiastes? Is not a Doctor of Laws unfolding the teachings of the life and visions of the prophet Daniel? Now, to crown all, we have a Doctor of Medicine, who is a Court Physician, and a Baronet to boot (besides being a student of divinity and law), expatiating in a wonderful way on the threefold constitution of man, and its bearings on the questions of health, knowledge, and religion. If matters go on much farther at this rate, we shall have to change the name of the Aldersgate-street institution to "The City Christian University;" only such a big-souled affair as that will need to find or make for itself a much bigger and handsomer body.

But our main business just now is with Sir Andrew Clark and his views of men and things. Lord Aberdeen, who gracefully presided over the meeting on Monday week, praised the wisdom and courage of the Committee in going to the top of the tree and getting a man so eminent in his profession to address them. Sir Andrew proceeded to justify the eulogium of the noble Earl. Our space would be well occupied with a complete report of the lecture, were it not for the many other demands upon it. We trust, however, that our brief notice may induce many to give a careful perusal to the entire address, as it will be published by the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., and revised, we may add, by the lecturer himself.*

I have chosen this subject, said Sir Andrew, because I hope through the medium of it to convey to you some scraps of useful knowledge, to suggest some fragments of counsel for your guidance in life, to awaken some fresh trains of thought on an important subject, and to furnish you with some arguments for the position of the Christian, that are not in my judgment surpassed in any other natural field of inquiry. Having remarked on the fourfold classification of things known to us—physical, vital, mental, and spiritual, Sir Andrew showed how all these, while related to each other, are yet totally distinct. Matter cannot, of itself, grow into life—Professor Tyndall himself admits that there is no such thing as spontaneous generation. Neither can life beget mind, nor can mind merge itself in spirit. The power that joins any two of these primal elements must come from above, not from below. Man alone of all created things possesses all these qualities—life in common with plants, mind in common with animals, and spirit in common with God.

Passing on to detail, Dr. Clark laid down the axioms that the great concern of the body must be health; that of the mind must be knowledge; that of the spirit must be holiness. Health may be defined as a state in which existence in itself is a joy. The conditions of health are obedience to the laws of health. These laws are few and simple. He doubted, however, whether many people really believe that such laws exist, because most of the chronic disorders of the race arise from the flagrant violation of them. He would be charitable enough to believe that in this matter men sinned from ignorance rather than from folly.

First of all, the body, like a fire, must be fed; but there must be temperance in food. Too many coals will smother the fire; excess in food will damage health. Let the food be fresh—no "preserved" foods; they are an abomination. (Rather a discouraging remark, by the way, for some extensive modern industries). Then there must be fluid as well as food, and that also in moderate quantity. Further, the dust and ashes of the fire must be stirred out; for this, nature has provided the functions of the skin, the kidneys, and the bowels. Another essential condition of health is labour, on which point the lecturer said some good things, including the witty remark that when a man retires from active life to take his ease, as he imagines, he invariably gets dis-ease!

Before quitting the health department of his subject, Sir Andrew dealt very plainly and courageously with two other considerations—the use of alcohol, and personal purity. His remarks on the first will certainly not satisfy everybody, if they satisfy anybody. What he said was, briefly, this: Alcohol is not necessary to health; neither is it, in my opinion, a helper of work physical or intellectual. But there are many weak, ailing folks in this world who think that a little stimulant ministers to their bodily comfort. Others think it is an assistance to them in their work. Therefore, while I earnestly advocate Temperance, it has not yet been proved, as I think, that alcohol, taken in "the physiological quantity"—a little with dinner and supper—interferes with the physical, mental, or the spiritual development of man. It may, of course, be argued that even such persons ought to abstain for the sake of example; I leave others to argue that point. At any rate, the less we have to do with alcohol the better. Without a doubt it takes the bloom off the spirit and joy and brightness of life.

We have one difficulty in accepting fully Sir Andrew's teaching on this subject. If he could only assure us that his weak, ailing patients, or his working friends, who think they need the help of a little alcohol, will never overstep the limits of "the physiological quantity," we should not have much occasion to quarrel with him, except that we think as a Christian man he might have made more of the argument from "example." As it is, we fear his words will be twisted into a defence of that which he himself would not defend; but he warned us of that danger, and we cannot fairly hold him responsible for misrepresentation.

On the question of personal purity he uttered a much more certain sound. He strongly condemned secret vice and social immorality. To say, he warmly declared, that these things in any shape or form are a necessity to health, as some have dared to advise, is not only a lie, but a mistaken lie. Then he gave utterance to some weighty words about the vast importance of cultivating self-control in youth, as a priceless factor in the future development and value of life. We trust this part of the lecture will be seriously pondered by all young men, and young women as well.

We must pass over the most interesting considerations of Sir Andrew, with respect to the functions of the mind, as the medium by which the spirit uses the body for the highest and noblest purposes. The argument by which he sought to show that a man can know as really and as much, if not more, about God, as he does about matter, is worthy of special attention. Last of all he came to the question of the spirit, the sole and supreme ruler of the complex man. He strongly contended for the freedom of the will (which is the organ of the spirit), as being an inherent element in the doctrine of human responsibility. It is true that, in a sense, our wills are not free, but that is because of the lack of exercise, by which they become strong, and for the want of which we become the sport of circumstances. Just in proportion as we are loyal to the capacities and powers with which God has endowed us, shall we rise above circumstances, and prove that there is a free will in man, and that it comes from God.

The time had passed so swiftly by, and there had been so much to say that the lecturer had to curtail his story; his peroration, nevertheless, was most impressive:—

"I am not here to tell you that there are no difficulties surrounding the subject; there are many. But we do not walk by sight alone. We walk by faith and sight—sight sufficient for faith. We are spiritual men. Difficulties! Where would be our strength of spirit if there were no difficulties? Never mind the difficulties. They are things we ought to long for. Our antagonists are our helpers in this sense. From the considerations I have mentioned, we may be sure that around us are the Everlasting Arms; above us is the Eternal God; here now with us is He who was like ourselves yet without sin; and He who is the Supreme Ruler of the universe is also the loving Father of men."

FEEDING THE HUNGRY.

DEAR SIR,—We are again confronted by most distressing scenes by reason of the added misery of bitter wintry weather to the already serious difficulty of enforced idleness amongst hundreds who would gladly work if employment were to be had.

Each morning sees a crowd of hungry and despairing men turned away from the docks after the requisite number of daily labourers has been engaged. It is terribly hard for the agents of this Mission to be compelled to refuse that practical help which we know would go so far towards convincing these poor fellows of the reality of Christianity, and of the tender care and love of the great Father in heaven for his suffering creatures.

Will your readers enable the committee to feed, at least twice a week, some of the starving sailors and dock labourers who are daily encountered by the missionaries?

A poor fellow at Poplar exclaimed this morning, "Your Mission was very kind in giving warm mufflers—can't they give us a slice of dry bread? I've left a wife and four children at home to-day without food, and now, with the dock gates shut in my face, there's no chance of getting any."

The free breakfasts given in the Tilbury Mission Hall during the recent distress there, were followed by brief Gospel Temperance addresses, and very many who had been "warmed and filled" were made in the truest sense to "depart in peace." May we not now be privileged to gladden some more hearts by similar means?—Yours faithfully,

E. J. Mather, Secretary.

Mission and other Appeals.

Shacklewell Gospel Mission.—We are in need of about £20 to help us out of pressing difficulties before the end of the year. Our exchequer is quite empty, while opportunities offer themselves for greatly extending our Mission work in this neighbourhood. Our Treasurer is Mr. C. W. Mutton, 56, Farleigh-road, Stoke Newington; Charles Gull, Hon. Superintendent.

Latymer-road Mission.—Mr. Aulay Macaulay, Hon. Secretary of this Mission, appeals for help in carrying on the Children's Convalescent Homes at Broadwater, near Worthing, and at Ramsgate. The Committee of the Mission will be compelled to close the Homes unless immediate aid is forthcoming. Contributions may be sent to Mr. E. Blain, 29, York-place, Portman-square, W.

Work among Soldiers.—The winter being at hand, it is of the utmost importance that this much needed work should be carried on with increased zeal. The present state of the funds, however, forbids our making any special effort, and not only so, but will, unless liberal support be speedily forthcoming, demand that the expenses should in some way be curtailed. This could only be effected by dispensing with the valuable services of our missionary, which would indeed be a great loss.—Robert J. Masters, Soldiers' Mission Hall, 327, Vauxhall Bridge-road, S.W.

Allier Mission, France.—At Montluçon there is a hall for workmen's meetings, which are well attended on Sunday evenings. At present an adapted coach-house serves as church; but M. Scilte has purchased a site, on which he is most anxious to erect a more suitable though unpretending building for the worship of God, and a small amount has already been collected towards this object. English Protestants are earnestly invited to help. Subscriptions will be thankfully received on behalf of Pastor Scilte by the Rev. G. B. Hamilton, Springfield Meadows Chelmsford, Essex.

LITTLE BOYS AT FARNINGHAM.

THE great event of the year at Farningham was the opening of the new Homes at Swanley by the Prince and Princess of Wales. In the recently-issued Report this is referred to with deepest satisfaction. A new feature in the administration is the receiving into the Homes of orphans of sailors, through a recent Act of Parliament, which provides for their maintenance. The Committee have, during the past year, appointed a travelling secretary to organise meetings in various parts of the country, at which the work of the Homes shall be explained and illustrated. The monthly periodical, "Our Little Lads," gives accounts of the Homes.

The conduct of the lads, with few exceptions, has been satisfactory, allowance being made for their peculiar circumstances. A good trade has been done in the printing department, through the kind patronage of friends outside. Repairs of the Homes have also been done by the boys. Indeed, plenty of useful work seems to have been executed in all the trades, including painting, carpentering, baking, tailoring, building, &c. The winter evenings are enlivened by the delivery of lectures. Several volumes have been presented to the library during the year, and the lads will be pleased to have more, especially small books, containing tales, anecdotes, travels, &c.

The Sunday services have been, for the most part, conducted by students from various colleges, and occasionally by ministers. On one occasion an earnest address was given in the chapel by "an old boy," to the great pleasure of all present. It must also be noted that recently a great need has been met in the purchase and erection of a large iron building for two thousand people. This will be used for drill and playground in wet weather, and for annual festivals. Eight of the lads have been sent to Canada, from whom favourable reports have been received.

Statistics show that 70 boys were admitted into the Homes during the year; 50 left for situations, &c.; and the present number is 317. The total sum received by all sources for the year amounted to about £12,000. The good and efficient singing by the boys has been highly complimented by Her Majesty's Assistant-Inspector of Music. He says: "In my time I have heard school choirs on the Continent and in Great Britain, but more beautiful singing than that of the Swanley Choir I have never heard." All friends of the Homes are requested to unite in prayer for the little lads every Monday morning. The London office of the Homes is at Ludgate-circus, E.C.

Letters to the Editor.

"SHE DRINKS."

SIR,—The now, painfully, too common expression "She drinks," as applied to so many women, educated and otherwise, should be a matter of serious concern for the churches of our land. I do not hesitate to affirm that the numerous grocers' spirit licenses at almost every street corner is one conducive cause of the increase of drinking habits among women and girls. Perhaps another cause is the facilities which women get for acquiring a taste for spirits during their confinements, when gin, brandy, &c. are prescribed by medical men. Many women and young girls now go as boldly into taverns and tap-rooms as their husbands or sweethearts.

The moral results of this in our large towns is fearful to contemplate. Women—in most cases—having weak will-powers, and suffering from nervous exhaustion through family trials, trouble, or monotony of household duties, often fly to the gin bottle through physical debility. Once a woman of weak will-power drinks or falls into open shame the case is, in most instances, hopeless of moral restoration. I wish the religious press and the Christian ministry would speak out strongly on this question, as it concerns the home's happiness and social well-being of modern society. A nation of drunken mothers is too awful a thing to be treated as a tap-room joke.—Faithfully yours,

JOHN T. MARKLEY.

POLITICAL PARTIES IN AMERICA.

DEAR SIR,—I don't believe you would willingly slander a great number of good people of the United States, and yet that is what THE CHRISTIAN of October 30 has done in the article or letter entitled "The American Presidential Struggle." To an American the statements made in these communications of "Most esteemed Christian friends in the United States," need no refutation, for the falsity of them is readily recognised; but as your readers are largely persons who know little or nothing of the parties in the United States, in justice to the truth, some reply should be made. I will not attempt to enter into details, but will simply answer a few of the most glaring misstatements. The statement that "Nine-tenths of the ministers and live Christians of the United States are in the Republican party" is untrue. Probably a majority of the ministers in the Northern States belong to the Republican party, but the entire clergy of the South (except some of the negro preachers and a few northern whites) are in the Democratic party. Nine-tenths of the Christians of the South, and fully one-third of the Christians in the North are members of the Democratic party. It is a well-known fact that some of the most earnest Christians and Bible students of this country vote the Democratic ticket. We could name them, but they are not politicians, and we do not wish to drag their names before the public in a political connection.

"Rum and ruin characterise the Democratic party" is another statement made by one of your correspondents, and is equally false. That there are many drinking men in the Democratic party no one denies. The recent election has just shown that a great majority of the white people of this country are in favour of Democratic rule, and is it reasonable to believe that the majority of the people of the United States are rum-drinkers? It is a fact admitted by the Republican press that the great state of Ohio is carried for the Republican candidates by the saloon-keepers of the city of Cincinnati, and the beer-drinking Germans of the State. In this country to-day two-thirds of the State Governments are in the hands of the Democratic party, entrusted to that party by the people of the several States. A Democratic President and a Democratic Congress has just been elected. If what your "esteemed Christian friends" say is true, then the moral condition of this people is terrible, to say the least.

The charge that Mr. Cleveland, the Democratic candidate for President, is "a notoriously corrupt and licentious man" is absolutely false, and has been proven so. That he sinned some ten years ago he freely admits, but according to all thorough investigations, his life since then has been correct. If this charge is true, why was it that after going through three hotly-contested campaigns he should be invited by the Buffalo (N.Y.) Y.M.C.A. to lay the corner-stone of its new building, and by the New York City Association to deliver its anniversary address? The address he delivered on the former occasion was a most noble one, and was widely circulated by the Associations of this country.

If the opponent of Mr. Cleveland is "respected as a pure and upright man" why was it that in the recent campaign he was opposed by such life-long Republicans as Rev. Dr. Theodore Cuyler, Bishop of Huntington, Rev. Dr. Ward, Rev. Dr. Bacon, Rev. Dr. Herrick Johnson, Rev. Washington Gladden, Rev. James Freeman Clarke, Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, Rev. Dr. Thwing, Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby, President Elliott of Harvard College, George William Curtis, and hundreds of like men? These men opposed Mr. Blaine on the ground of his dishonesty in public life.

We will not enter into a discussion of the policies of the two different parties. Both are about evenly divided on the question of civil service reform. There are bad men in both parties, but I verily believe that the majority of each is composed of honest and loyal citizens, and that such constitutes a majority of the people of the United States. As a rule I don't believe in political discussions in religious newspapers, but since you have permitted one side of the question to be stated, it will be no more than fair and right that this letter should appear. It may be well to remark that I am a young man of Republican and strong Union antecedents, and my only desire in this letter is to "tell the truth."

St. Louis, U.S. P. A. WILTING.

[We regret the insertion of the letters here replied to; they would not have been given but for the high esteem we have for the writers. Having inserted this rejoinder, no good end would be gained by any further discussion.—ED].

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

A PUBLIC meeting in connection with this Mission was held at the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, on Friday evening. The spacious hall was well filled.

Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR, who expects shortly to return to China, in addressing the meeting, said: It is a great privilege to have fellowship with Christ in his sufferings, and a wide field is offered for this in missionary work. The papers speak of the sufferings endured at the present time by missionaries in China. But I speak from past experience, when I say it is a blessed thing to be counted worthy to suffer for his Name. How many here are following Him fully? Often the hindrance to this is simply a fear lest it should entail suffering in some form. But we would not shrink from it if we knew its blessedness. After recounting the remarkable history of the Mission during the past three years, with which our readers are tolerably familiar, Mr. Taylor said he believed there would be unspeakable regrets in the world to come through holding back from self-denial. The moment we stop in the obedient following of Jesus, that moment the flow of blessing into our souls is restrained. God wants to flood us with blessing, and will do it for anyone who is ready to surrender all for Him.

The meeting was then addressed by three young friends who will shortly proceed to China. Mr. C. T. STUDD said he felt that, until recently, when the claims of God upon him became clear, he had never been truly converted. How can we be the disciples of Christ if we are refusing to obey his commands, whatever our professions may be? Mr. STANLEY SMITH said that the message of God to him was, "Leave all, and follow Me." He had been led to consecrate himself to God in connection with the China Inland Mission. Mr. BEAUCHAMP said he had intended to work in London, but God was directing him to China; after deciding to go he had experienced unspeakable joy in his soul. All might have the same if they would be honest with themselves, and get down low before God. Rev. WM. CASSEL also spoke some earnest words, and this most excellent meeting was closed with prayer by Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke.

BRUTON, SOMERSET.—Rev. D. J. Gass, pastor of the Congregational Church, having completed thirteen years of ministerial life in Bruton, a commemoration tea-meeting, followed by a meeting of the congregation, was held in the class-room on Wednesday, Nov. 12, Mr. W. Bord presiding. The fact that a considerable number of the young people in the senior classes in the Sunday-school have recently become decided Christians is a source of gratitude and encouragement to Mr. Gass and his friends, and was thankfully referred to by several of the speakers.

BIBLE AND PRAYER UNION.—In his Monthly Notes for December, Rev. T. Richardson says: "Our Union by November 1 had enrolled 208,700 members. Since our last issue we have added 135 new members from foreign parts, including South Africa, South America, and West Australia. We would again remind our subscribers for Monthly Notes that the subscriptions terminate with this number. It will greatly facilitate our arrangements if those who have not already sent, but intend to do so, will send in their orders for 1885 (January to December) as soon as possible, on the forms supplied, which give all information. Amounts of two shillings and upwards will be acknowledged at once, and the new cards for 1885, which will contain the daily chapters, will be forwarded with the January Notes by January 1. Foreign postage for Australia, China, India, New Zealand, &c., extra. Where several members of the same family take the Monthly Notes, it would greatly reduce the labour if all were sent to one person, whose name and number should be filled in on the form. Managers of mothers' meetings and parochial or congregational branches, Sunday-school teachers and secretaries should see that each member has the new card for 1885. For every card of renewal required, the name and old card number must be correctly stated. For each Member's Card required, whether for a new or old member, one penny should be sent. All communications to be addressed (members to quote card number): Rev. Thomas Richardson, vicar of St. Benet's, Mile-end-road, London, E.

EVANGELISING BY INTERPRETATION.

A REMINISCENCE

REV. E. P. HAMMOND.

AT the Central Noon Prayer-meeting, Aldersgate-street, one day last week, Rev. E. Payson Hammond, being present, was desired to speak. He began by remarking that it was his privilege to be in London when this noon prayer-meeting was inaugurated, and to do what he could in assisting Mr. Moody and others at the time. He rejoiced that it had continued to do good work all those years, and he had always read with interest the brief notices of its proceedings in the religious papers.

Mr. Hammond proceeded to say that the sight of his old friend, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, reminded him of some facts with respect to evangelistic work on the continent of Europe, in which so much interest was now felt. A number of years ago Mr. Radcliffe, accompanied by Mr. Shuldham Henry, went to Paris, intending to hold Gospel services for the English residents there. The French came to the meetings in such large numbers that Mr. Radcliffe was compelled to speak through the interpretation of Pastor Theodore Monod to the audiences that flocked together. A rich blessing followed the labours of these friends, not only in Paris, but in Lyons, Geneva, and other places on the Continent. Shortly afterwards Mr. Albert Woodruff, a wealthy gentleman in Brooklyn, with his wife and family, came across the Atlantic, intending to spend some months in foreign travel. Mr. Woodruff's heart was greatly moved at the sight of the spiritual destitution among the children in the great continental cities, there being then no Sunday-schools in any of them. He abandoned his plans of enjoyment in travel, and went to work with such perseverance that he was able to plant Sunday-schools in the leading cities of Germany, France, Italy, and elsewhere.

"When Mr. Woodruff returned to the United States (Mr. Hammond continued), he found that I was about to start for a visit to Europe and Palestine. He came to Newark, N.J., to see me, and strongly urged that I should endeavour to do for the children on the Continent, through an interpreter, what Mr. Radcliffe had done so successfully for the adults. He gave me letters of introduction to various friends on the Continent. I accordingly held meetings in various cities—Paris, Florence, Naples, Beyrout, Jerusalem, &c. I found that with a good interpreter—a man with a warm heart, as well as a quick brain; in other words, one who was a channel through whom the Holy Spirit could work—the people were reached as readily as they could be by a direct mode of address. We found a striking instance of this in one of the Italian cities I visited. Meetings were held on two sides of the city. On the one side the interpreter was a gentleman of learning and ability, but he merely expressed the truths of the Gospel mechanically, and without feeling. The children looked and listened; but when any who were specially interested were invited to remain, instead of doing so they went away. As far as could be ascertained, not one of them was converted. On the other side of the city the children were very much the same in point of intelligence. The man who stood between me and the children seemed, however, to feel deeply every word that he uttered. As I sought to describe the great doctrines of the Atonement, and to set forth the love of God in Christ, he stood there with tears in his eyes, evidently feeling in his very heart the truth of what he conveyed to the children. And they felt it too. I do not think there would be any exaggeration in saying that in those meetings on that particular side of the city, and in a few days, over 200 young people were regenerated by the Spirit of God through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ."

This reminiscence by Mr. Hammond suggests some important reflections. How wonderful is the chain of events! Mr. Radcliffe goes to Paris to address his own countrymen, but the hand of the Lord leads him among those speaking an unknown tongue. Mr. Woodruff comes from America and catches the flame of holy zeal, so that he labours for the good of the children, who perhaps had not been at all in Mr. Radcliffe's plans. Mr. Hammond takes up the apostolic succession, by the instigation of Mr. Woodruff, and finds access to many youthful hearts through the medium of another voice. What an encouragement for workers to sow the seed beside all waters; they know not what the far-off harvest may be. Is there not, also, a great deal more to be done in evangelising the world by means of interpretation? By taking pains to find out sympathetic translators, why should not Christian men or women travel "from China to Peru," preaching the Gospel all the way?

YOUNG MEN IN AMERICAN CITIES.

LAST Sunday, says The New York Evangelist, was devoted in many of our city churches to special services for young men. If in all there was as much earnest and pungent truth as it was our privilege to hear from the pulpit in Madison-square, the day will not have passed without leaving a permanent impression and doing permanent good. Dr. Parkhurst dwelt with great plainness and fidelity on the temptations and dangers of city life—the temptations to intemperance and impurity, and to those vices engendered by the greed for money; as well as on the safeguards in the home, in domestic restraint, in the love of father and mother, in their prayers, and above all, in the Almighty arm, which might hold up young men when they were ready to fall.

Among the favouring influences, he dwelt with just emphasis on the good wrought by Young Men's Christian Associations, which he commended to the sympathy and support of the Christian public. These have saved many a young man exposed to the dangers of City life, who would otherwise have been overcome by temptation, to his temporal and eternal ruin. But with all this, it may be doubted whether young men in our cities have as many safeguards as fifty years ago, from the different home-life which they then enjoyed, and which is the best of all safeguards against temptation. Those who have heard the late William E. Dodge speak of New York as it was when he first came to it, will remember how very different was the relation of clerks to their employers from what it is now. Then merchants often lived in the same buildings with their stores, and took their clerks into their own families. Thus when he came here, a boy fresh from his new England home, he was not thrown into a boarding-house among strangers, amid new and perhaps evil companions, but was taken into the family of that grand old man, Anson G. Phelps. He was not only a clerk in his store, but like a son in his own father's house, who came into the family prayers and enjoyed the best domestic life. It was under such influences that he grew up to be what he was—one of the noblest specimens of Christian manhood in his generation.

But now young men come to the city, and enter a store, and their relations to their employers cease with the hours of service. When the clerks leave their stores at night, they go to their city homes, often dreary and desolate enough; they have no father or mother, no brother or sister, or friend to go to. Their hearts are sick, and often it is from mere loneliness that they are led by their associates to places of amusement which prove places of temptation and sin. Next to the grace of God, there is nothing to save a young man like a home, warm with a mother's and a sister's love. The highest merit of the Young Men's Christian Association is that in some degree it supplies the need of a home. It offers a place of meeting; it brings young men together; it gives them society; and so it keeps the feet of many in the paths of purity and peace.

A New York correspondent sends us the following:—

The week of prayer for young men, commencing Sunday the 9th, was observed at the various Y.M.C.A's. here with vigour, but I only propose to speak of what I observed and took part in at the Central and Parent Association of New York. There was a spirit of earnestness from the beginning, and great blessing resulted. All ages were there, youths just entering into business, young men, and those advanced in years.

The evening meetings, which commenced at 9, were conducted by Mr. Webster, who pursued the same plan throughout, which was first to have a meeting of Christian workers for half an hour before the other, for prayer and study of the Scriptures selected for that evening's lesson. The general meeting was held in the large parlour, and near the close of it the leader earnestly invited those who were anxious, in any degree, to come to Christ, and in token of their wish to hold up their hand. Then the meeting was dismissed with the singing of a hymn, those who had held up their hands retaining their seats. All such were then spoken and prayed with. It was my happiness to guide two—one a youth of sixteen, the other a man of fifty—to the Lord Jesus; both professed to have found salvation through faith in his Name ere they left. Their changed and happy faces testified to this.

I should say that more than twenty souls were brought to God during that happy week. Helping others, my own soul was revived, warmed, and quickened; watering others, I was watered myself.

I cannot speak too highly of the way in which Mr. McBurney, the secretary, and his assistant secretaries and helpers carry on the work of this central Y.M.C.A. Ever ready to hear the tale of woe, and to assist the needy, they are still more ready to point all to the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world, and many who come for temporal assistance find a Saviour. "Men, too, of all nationalities are represented in this Association."

The new converts were all gathered to a special meeting on their behalf, at which each was asked (1) what had induced him to attend those meetings, and how he had heard of them? (2) what led him to give his heart to God? Then he was required to enrol his name on the Sunday morning or Thursday evening Bible-class list, where he would be fed with the milk of the Word; lastly he was affectionately advised as to what Church to join and what work to take up for Christ. All this is most important, and cannot be rated too highly, for the definite taking-up of some branch of Christian work suited to each convert, and the feeding them in well-taught Bible-classes, and the impressing on them the necessity of joining themselves outwardly to some section of Christ's Church on earth, are the means of keeping these babes in Christ from falling away, and losing their first love.

EVANGELISATION IN NORMANDY.

LAST week M. Monchatre delivered an address at the Union Chapel, Manchester, upon the Protestant Mission work which he is conducting in Normandy. M. Monchatre has found it necessary this year to choose between the resignation of the pastorate at Elbeuf and the abandonment of the work of evangelisation in the surrounding district. He has accordingly sacrificed the assured income and position of pastor of Elbeuf, and will in future devote himself to missionary effort in a part of the country where he is well known and appreciated. The work will be conducted amongst a poor working population, and it is considered most desirable that at least £300 of the sum required for the coming year should be provided by friends in England. To assist in this undertaking a Manchester Committee has been formed with Rev. Dr. M'Laren as president. There was a considerable audience to listen to the address of M. Monchatre, who described his work amongst the people of Normandy and the difficulties and encouragements with which he met. Mdme. Monchatre also addressed the meeting, and urged that there was plenty of work to be done in the manufacturing towns of the North of France, but that funds were urgently needed in order to accomplish it. Rev. Gordon Calthrop, St. Augustine's Church, Highbury, N., will receive help from any friends in London.

MR. AND MRS. McGRANAHAN have been at work at Grand Rapids, Mich. It is probable they will join Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey in the conventions that are being held.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.

ENGLISH AND FOREIGN OUTCAST WOMEN.
THIS WINTER'S MISSION.

The Committee have decided to MISSION the WHOLE OF THE METROPOLIS AGAIN THIS WINTER by means of a general Distribution of one of the Gospels, and to hold Midnight and Afternoon Meetings in every available district.

MEETINGS WILL BE SPECIALLY ARRANGED in order to seek the salvation of FOREIGN OUTCAST WOMEN, now so numerous in certain parts of the metropolis.

£5 WILL MISSION A DISTRICT AND PROVIDE TEA FOR A MIDNIGHT MEETING.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of SHAFTESBURY, K.G.
ESTABLISHED 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES:

27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN;
AND 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE, or by the Proprietors of this paper.

NOTE.—Subscriptions or Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Friends will please notice the exact title "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

Mission Work amongst the Poor of S.E. London.

REPORT NOW READY FOR 1883-4.

Extracts from the Life of the Sailor Preacher.

£450 will enable us to close the year 1884 free from debt.

45,000 persons will read this appeal: how many will kindly send a donation to help us? Our report for year ending October 23, 1884, with short account of the Sailor's Life, will be sent to all who send us a donation, however small. The account contains full detail of our work to the poor of S.E. London. We hear much about the Bitter Cry, but, thank God, we reach some.

J. T. WATKINS, Accountant.

I have examined the above accounts with the cash book, and find them to agree, the principal items of expenditure being vouched in the usual way.

November 12, 1884. THOMAS GREENWOOD.

GOODS FOR OUR FANCY SALE AND THE SAILORS' PRIZE SHIP will be gladly received at 89, Bellenden-road, up to December 12, 1884. Dolls or Toys (cheap ones) will be of great service to us.

OUR FREE TEA FUND.

6d. will enable us to give a good tea to each person. We desire to entertain between 300 and 400 poor people this Christmas. Who will help us?

much wanted for the poor. Blankets, or, in fact, anything to make glad the poor people. Many of our friends are in much poverty just now; no work for father means little bread for the children.

I thank the kind ladies who sent the wool goods. I had the pleasure of giving the cuffs and scarfs to many who needed them. You should have seen their faces; it would have been good payment.

COLLECTING CARDS.

Please send them in by Christmas. I shall be glad to send to any person who will collect for our Mission one of these cards, with report of our work. If you can come or send to the Mission, and judge of its merits, I shall be glad. Monday, Tuesday, Friday, Saturday, at 8 p.m.; Sunday, 11 a.m. and 6.30 p.m.

God bless all our kind supporters; and I very earnestly ask for help at this time. I want to give a little help to some at Christmas if funds will permit. The Lord will provide.

Yours gratefully,

G. W. LINNECAR,

89, BELLENDEN-RD., PECKHAM, LONDON, S.E.

The Sailor Preacher is open for week-night engagements, to Preach or Lecture, in January or February, 1885. All full for 1884.

What are we to do?

A CALL FOR HELP FROM THE WEST!

Very earnestly do the Committee of the LATYMER ROAD MISSION appeal for Help from each Reader.

The lowness of their Funds is causing them great anxiety.

Fully £700 are needed before the end of the year.

The Lord has marvellously blessed the Gospel Temperance work since the opening of the New Hall.

Hundreds of Ragged Girls and Boys are gathered in each evening.

The Mission work consists of Sunday Schools, with an average attendance of 323 children; Children's Gospel Services; Evangelistic Meetings; Bands of Hope; Ragged Boys' Evening Shelters; Ragged Girls' Evening Shelters; Mothers' Meeting; Night School; Sick Children's Dinner Table; Soup Kitchen; Farthing Bank; Industrial Exhibitions; Christian Workmen's Club; Infant Day Nursery; Convalescent Homes (Worthing and Ramsgate); and other agencies for good.

Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT will be happy to take charge of Contributions, which may also be sent to EDWARD BLAIR, Esq., Fretherne House, 29, York-place; or to

AULAY MACAULAY, Hon. Sec.

British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews.

This Society undertakes a work beyond the aim and capability of ordinary Missionary Societies. It is founded on an unsectarian basis, and receives its support from Christians of all denominations. Its Committee and Agents belong to several Christian bodies, and its Honorary Secretaries are A. SAPHIR, D.D., and J. H. RIGG, D.D.

The Society has upwards of 100 who carry the Gospel to their brethren in England, Italy, Germany, Switzerland, Austria, Russia, Turkey, and North Africa. Their labours are supplemented by the work of schoolmasters and colporteurs. Tracts and copies of the Scriptures are circulated. Many Jews have by this Society been led to believe that "Jesus is the Christ." Much good has been done among the thousands of Jews in London by the Missionaries, by the "House of Call," and by the Mission House, 26, Church-street, Spitalfields.

Increased Funds are urgently needed, and will be thankfully received by the Secretary, REV. J. DUNLOP, at the Office, 96, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, London.

BIBLE HELPS FOR BUSY MEN. By A. C. P. COOTE. 1s. J. E. Hawkins. A few weeks ago a City man said: "Life is such a rush with me that I get no time to extract the marrow and fatness from the Word." To such this little book will be helpful.

A LITTLE DISCIPLE. By T. D. 2, Castle-street, E.C. The story of a child who died in his seventh year. A pattern of meekness and docility, and an encouraging illustration of the benefit of pious maternal training, he not only became a true disciple of Jesus, but was instrumental during his illness in converting the nurse who attended him.

COMFORT: A BOOK FOR THE COTTAGE. By JANE BESEMERES. Nisbet & Co. 1s. Sorrowing ones, whether in cottage or mansion, will find in these pages much to console and strengthen their hearts. The precious truths and promises of God's Word are presented and applied both in prose and in song, so as to lift up and cheer the drooping heart and mind.

VANISHED FACES. By JANE BESEMERES. Nisbet & Co. 1s. The same authoress gives us in this little volume a number of short poems in which thoughts of a varied but always scriptural and evangelical kind are tenderly and forcibly expressed.

EMBLEMS OF THE HOLY SPIRIT. By F. E. MARSH. John F. Shaw & Co. A series of articles reprinted from Footsteps of Truth. A commendatory preface, from the pen of Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, speaks of the book as specially serviceable for young Christians. It contains seven chapters, each abounding in sound exposition and spiritual teaching on essential themes. (1s. 6d.)

NEWSPAPER STORIES: A New Year's Address to the Young. By J. FORBES MONCRIEFF. C. Glass & Co., Glasgow. The author has made a selection of facts and incidents recorded in the daily and other papers; and on these he has dilated in the way of inference, of counsel, and of caution. Written specially for the young, this pamphlet would also be found of value by teachers and others for purposes of illustration.

OUR LORD'S METHOD OF HANDLING THE WORD OF GOD: A Model for Workers among Young Men. By HENRY THORNE. 1d. The distinctive features that marked our Lord's use of the written Word have been carefully sought out, and are here presented as a model for those who would be mighty in the Scriptures. This pamphlet contains suggestions that would be helpful to all preachers. Copies may be had of the author, 2, Highland-villas, Mill-hill-road, Derby. (8s. per hundred copies.)

SANCTIFICATION; or, The Highway of Holiness. By Rev. W. MARSHALL. Nisbet & Co. 1s. A reprint of the well-known work, first published in 1692, and known as Marshall's Gospel Mystery of Sanctification. The volume before us is an abridgment, in the author's own words, and furnishes an excellent help to the study of the important truth on which it treats. It presents a standard work in a modern and readable form; and should have a wide circulation in the churches of Christ just now.

THE BOOK OF DANIEL. By Dr. MURPHY. Nisbet & Co. We cannot pronounce Dr. Murphy's exposition of Daniel's prophecies superior to Professor Birks', which appeared forty years ago. Nor can we regard it as throwing so clear a light on the future as Mr. Guinness's recent volume. It seems to us, nevertheless, a work of great merit, and it contains a large amount of information on matters of detail which is both new and valuable. His exposition of the eleventh chapter of the prophecy is especially interesting, and far more satisfactory than almost any attempt to elucidate it with which we are acquainted.

From the Drummond Tract Depot, Stirling, we have received the following: WORDS OF LIFE Seventy-five illustrated four-page assorted tracts for 6d. Every tract contains the Gospel message, and would seldom be declined even by those who object to tracts of the ordinary size and form.—WITH OUR CARDS. By WILLIAM LUFF. 6d. Forty-two poem leaflets for enclosure with New Year cards. No recommendation of Mr. Luff's productions is needed. These are as beautiful as everything else which he writes.—ACORN SERIES. By Rev. A. AVERELL RAMSEY. SALEM SERIES. By H. K. WOOD. ST. MARK'S SERIES. By Rev. G. EVERARD. These are packets, fifty copies assorted, of illustrated little books for enclosure in letters. All are equally good, affording means of communicating truth and light through our daily correspondence. (6d. per packet.)

MORNING DEW DROPS. By JANIE WOOD. Partridge & Co. A text and verse for each day of he year. The memoir of the late author enhances he value of the little text-book.

GOOD WORDS. Among the announcements for the year 1885 are a series of papers, "Among my Specimens," by Professor Henry Drummond, and "Reminiscences of my Life," by Mary Howitt.

HISTORICAL RECORDS OF THE Y.M.C.A. By GEO. JOHN STEVENSON. Christian Commonwealth Office, 73, Ludgate-hill. This is a reprint of the series of papers that have lately appeared in the Commonwealth, with a preface by Mr. W. Hind Smith, and an appendix, containing a list of Associations throughout the world. A portrait engraving of Mr. George Williams is given as a frontispiece. As a handbook of the rise and progress of the Y.M.C.A., the little volume is quite unique; it ought to be in every reference library.

ANDREW MARVEL AND HIS FRIENDS: A Story of the Siege of Hull. By MARIE HALL. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. We are glad to see this worthy book in its fourth edition. It is a fitting tribute to the memory of one whose life is too little known by the people. Mrs. Hall brings out the character of the anti-popery hero so well that at the end of the story we thoroughly know the man who, when the King sent to inquire how he might serve him, replied, "It was not in his Majesty's power to serve him." It will make an entertaining and instructive gift-book.

A LIFE OF ST. PAUL. By the Rev. JAMES STALKER, M.A. T. & T. Clark. No higher praise could be given to this than to say that in devoutness, in knowledge, in the freshness of its ideas, in the interest of its method, and in the eloquence of its language, it is a fit companion to the "Life of Christ" from the same pen. Even to those who know by heart the details of the great Apostle's life, this glowing sketch will be a revelation. Written with the fullest acquaintance with the vast modern literature on the subject, with a fine sympathy for the more tender and personal aspects of his theme, Mr. Stalker has portrayed the outer and the inner life of Paul with a mingled power and beauty which is as rare as it is needed in evangelical writing. (1s. 6d.)

LAWS OF CHRIST FOR COMMON LIFE. By R. W. DALE, D.D. Hodder & Stoughton. It is sufficient merely to mention that Dr. Dale has published another book. No preacher of our time is more respected for honest work, for commonsense speaking, for his admirable reduction of lofty spiritual teaching to the plane of ordinary life, and for the strong moral energy with which he appeals to the conscience of Christian manhood. In these papers (which have already appeared in various periodicals), these and other qualities are preserved in all their vigour and freshness. We are glad to welcome each new volume as an application of powers so great, and useful to an ever-widening circle of practical truth. The titles of some of the chapters will suggest their importance: "Everyday business a divine calling;" "The sacredness of property;" "Family Life;" "Political and municipal duty;" "Christian Worldliness." (6s.)

CANADIAN PICTURES. Drawn with Pen and Pencil. By the MARQUIS of LORNE, K.T. Religious Tract Society. 8s. None of the issues of the Society are more attractive than the series of illustrated books of travel—"Pictures," as they are happily entitled—from Bible lands, from Scotland, from the German Fatherland, from Egypt, India, America, &c. Dr. Manning, who projected them, was also the author of several of these exquisite volumes, which are all profusely illustrated with wood engravings of the highest type. But in some respects this latest of the series will command the widest interest. These Canadian Pictures by the late Governor-General deal with the past history and present status of the Dominion; its relations with the mother country, its climate, its Indians, its eastern and western provinces and its new territories, its social and religious life, its lakes and rivers, its mountains and plains, its present inhabitants and the prospects it affords for colonists. The Homes of Miss Rye and Miss Macpherson are mentioned with warm appreciation. There is scarcely a subject left undescribed by an observant and discriminative pen, or unsketched by a skilful and realistic pencil. A more attractive present or a more useful prize-book it is difficult to imagine.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. have issued the first part of Dr. Cunningham Geikie's "Life and Words of Christ" (7d.). To say anything in praise of this standard work, which has passed through thirty library editions, would be almost like gilding refined gold. A large and handsome coloured map of Palestine, in the time of our Saviour, is given in this part.

An excellent assortment of leaflets in sixpenny packets is sent out by Mr. J. G. Wheeler, of 88, Mildmay-park, N. There are "Coloured Tracts" by Mr. Moody, Miss Havergal, and others; a "Havergal Packet" of Gospel books; a "Court Envelope" packet, and others. All are well suited for enclosing in letters to unconverted friends, or for general distribution. Mr. Wheeler also issues the "Ruby Illustrated Almanac," in various editions; the one in imitation leather, interleaved for notes, will be found extremely handy for pocket use.

GRACIOUS WORDS ALMANACK. 1d. and 6d. J. E. Hawkins. A marvellous pennyworth, containing so much precious truth that it is just the thing for general distribution.

THE GOLDEN GRAIN ALMANACK, Pocket Book, and Diary, for 1885 (J. E. Hawkins), is published as usual in six different styles, from 1d. to 1s. 6d. The writer has used this almanack daily for nine years, and found its contents to be indeed "Golden Grain."

Some specimens of Christmas cards have reached us which are unique; quite unlike anything we have before seen. They are Japanese in style, light, elegant, and artistic. They can be had, at various prices, from J. S. T., 51, Tachbrook-road, Leamington.

Messrs. Marcus Ward & Co., Oriel House, Farringdon-street, have sent us specimens of their Christmas cards. For those qualities of grace, and beauty in design, form, and colouring, which are best expressed, perhaps, by the term "æsthetic," it would be difficult to surpass Messrs. Ward's selection. We have the authority of Sir Andrew Clark for giving a due place to the exercise and gratification of the æsthetic functions. We may, therefore, conclude that these "things of beauty" will be "a joy for ever," or, at any rate, as long as they last, which will be far beyond the coming Christmastide.

Messrs. Partridge & Co. publish the following four New Year's addresses:—

THE HUSBANDRY OF THE SOUL. By Rev. P. B. POWER, M.A. 2d. Most useful and timely. Many of us are so occupied in keeping the vineyards of others, while neglecting our own, that the little foxes spoil the vines unheeded. The field is the world and the vineyard is the Lord's Israel, but if our own soul's husbandry be overlooked, we shall be unprofitable labourers in field or vineyard. Worthy of wide distribution.

"HE SHALL LIVE." By SOPHIA M. NUGENT. 1d. An exquisite exposition and individual application of the seventy-second Psalm. "He shall live" is the key-note to a delightful hymn of that inward kingdom which is righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost.

RUNNING. 1d. By Mrs. CRONYN. Thoughtful words from one who always has something helpful and true to say. It will be a welcome enclosure in letters to friends.

OUT OF PRISON. By Rev. E. W. MOORE. 1d. The sad condition of a soul imprisoned in sin, and the way of release, are aptly and forcibly illustrated. Well suited for an evangelistic tract.

ANNUALS.

EARLY DAYS. 2, Castle-street, E.C. Another of the pretty annuals for the young people, with plenty of engravings. Here are puzzles, poetry, pictures, &c., as well as little Bible readings and music. 1s. 6d.

THE MOTHERS' FRIEND (Annual Volume), (1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton), forms a treasury in which mothers will delight, while the young folks are well provided for in its sparkling pages. It is well illustrated.

THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE MIRROR. Annual Volume. 337, Strand. Attractive to the eye, and brimful of information, instruction, anecdotes, and quite a store of good things. This excellent publication will be a suitable Christmas present to the friend of Temperance.

THE FIRESIDE ANNUAL. 7s. 6d. "Home Words" Office. What so welcome at Christmas as "the fireside?" This ably-conducted magazine makes a handsome volume, and the editor leads us through its pleasant pages from the Queen on her throne to "the brother of low degree." With its high tone and good illustrations it is a book for all.

THE HERALD OF MERCY. 1884. Morgan & Scott. 1s. The volume for the current year is full of rich and varied Gospel teaching suited for old and young. It purports to be adapted for "Humble Homes," but will be found of value for homes of every description. It merits high commendation as a Christexalting and soul-convincing messenger of divine mercy and truth. Those who have known it in past years will find its pages this year in every way worthy of its previous repute.

We have also received the following books:—

Hodder & Stoughton:—
The Nation's Vice. By the late Dr. Grindrod. 5s.

Kegan Paul, Trench & Co.:—
Darkness and Dawn: the Peaceful Birth of a New Age.

Children's Special Service Mission:—
Our Own Magazine: Annual Volume.

Jarrold & Sons:—
A Star in the Crown: a Story of Schoolboy Life. By Daniel Darlinghurst. 1s.

David Douglas, Castle-street, Edinburgh:—
Love Revealed: Meditations on John xiii. to xvii. By Rev. George Bowen, Bombay.

 "Queensford," a Temperance tale noticed in our last issue, is published by the Scottish, not the National Temperance League.

Goulburn, New South Wales.—"E. R." asks whether there are any thoroughly Christian schools in New South Wales, especially in Goulburn or its neighbourhood, for the purpose of training boys and girls for the Lord's service, by combining an intellectual with domestic or manual labour, a healthful education for body, mind, and soul.

LADY HOPE entertained a large number of her friends, and assistants from several West-end establishments, at her residence, Great Cumberland-place, W., last week. Professor André's Alpine Choir sang several pieces, and appropriate addresses were delivered.

MORMON MISCREANTS.—The rescue, last week, of a young English girl from the clutches of a band of Mormon missionaries (we had almost written miscreants) who were taking a number of "converts" to Utah, is a hint of what might be done in saving many ignorant and innocent immigrants abroad. This young girl learned on ship-board what a nest of licentiousness Mormondom is, and gladly embraced an opportunity to escape from it. No woman ought to be allowed to leave this port for Salt Lake without knowing what she is going to.—New York Independent.

Window Gardening.—Mrs. E. L. Congdon, 304, E. 15th-street, New York City, U.S., writes: "Notice was made at one time in the pages of The Christian of an association in London for promoting window gardening amongst the poor. I would be much obliged if a Report of this association could be sent me, as we are about to introduce the work amongst the poor of this city, and would be glad of suggestions from those who have had experience in it."

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday Morning, November 29, 1884.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday Morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

A NEW EFFORT to extend the kingdom of Christ is being carried on in Liverpool—that of "Mural Evangelisation." Gospel placards of good size are posted in the crowded thoroughfares. Could not other great centres of our population act upon this plan? So far, our intention is to renew the posters each month, and by and by we hope to render them specially attractive to the passers-by. Edmund Cleaton.

CHRISTIAN HOME FOR EMIGRANTS, BLACKWALL.—A great need is felt for tract and book bags to give to the emigrants passing through this Home. Any friends who are willing to make them and send them to Mr. Wilké, the manager, will be doing useful work. Earnest prayer is asked for the large numbers going this winter, and much praise is due to our Heavenly Father for the many souls who have lately been blessed.

HELP WANTED FOR THE ANNUAL SALE

ON BEHALF OF

Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children,

Now Sheltering, Educating, and Training over 1,300 Poor Boys and Girls.

Will all who are preparing gifts for the Annual Sale on behalf of the Homes

KINDLY SEND THEM IN AT ONCE,

for as yet but very little has been received? Will those whose busy fingers are at work for the Sale, remember that shirts for boys and men, suits for little boys, aprons and pinafores for girls, and sets of baby clothing are particularly valuable additions, being much asked for and readily sold. Of course, besides these, jewellery, old coins, old china, curios, musical instruments, and fancy work, trinkets, articles of vertu, books, drawings, bric-a-brac, and other examples of the thousand-and-one tasteful ornaments which are sought for by purchasers, will be very gratefully received and acknowledged.

The SALE will this year be of the SAME CHARACTER as LAST YEAR, that is to say,

Instead of holding a Public Bazaar at the West End during the month of December, as formerly, all the Goods received will be made up into

£5 and £10 Boxes. These Boxes will each contain a very excellent selection of at least the value of £6 and £12 respectively, and will be sent on receipt of P.O. Order or Cheque to any part of the country.

Ladies ordering these Boxes confer a great benefit on the "Homes"; for by this easy method all the articles received may be disposed of without any loss in the way of such expenses as are usually incurred by holding a Bazaar at the West End of London.

Many kind-hearted sympathisers have already expressed warm approval of this plan, and promised to purchase boxes, with the contents of which they propose to hold in their own houses, to which their personal friends can be invited during the present season.

If there be many articles left over unsold, they can be disposed of in the last week of January (D.V.), in the New Hall of the "Edinboro' Castle."

Dr. Barnardo earnestly invites all who love poor children, to co-operate with him in this new plan to increase the funds of the "Homes," by which, too, all the wearying, disappointing, and expensive drawbacks of a public Bazaar may be avoided.

The Boxes, carefully lined and packed, will be ready for transmission on the 10th December, and can be despatched on receipt of order to any railway station in the Kingdom. Applications (PREPAID), with full instructions as to conveyance, etc., should be sent in as soon as possible, addressed to

The TRADE MANAGER,
18, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

To all who have already in any degree helped by Contributions of Useful or Fancy Articles, Dr. Barnardo now desires to offer the expression of his very grateful acknowledgments.

ROBERT ANNAN,

THE CHRISTIAN HERO.

BY REV. J. MACPHERSON.

"The memory of Robert Annan was worthy to be had in remembrance, and Mr. Macpherson has told the story well, in such a manner as to move the feelings of the reader; and we hope to stimulate others to follow the noble example of this CHRISTIAN HERO in humble life."—Christian Work.

"A striking example of the power of Divine grace, exhibited in the conversion and devoted life of Robert Annan—a Christian Hero indeed."

Gospel Magazine.

"We heartily thank the Rev. J. Macpherson for his well-written, graphic, and telling life of this 'Christian Hero.' It is a book to be read by all."

P. P. BLISS:

HIS LIFE AND LIFE WORK.

EDITED BY

MAJOR WHITTLE and REV. W. GUEST.

Containing also an Introduction by D. L. MOODY, and Memorial Notice by IRA D. SANKEY.

SPECIAL CHEAP EDITION. Tinted Covers, 6d.

"A most interesting and invaluable book, both for the young and the aged, and cannot be too highly prized or too widely circulated: in fact, from the good it is calculated to do, it ought to be in the hands of every English reader."—Midland Gazette.

"This is a biography of an eminent and much blessed servant of God, who was the Charles Wesley of his time. He is the author and composer of over seventy of the finest hymns in the Sankey collections. His character was lovely, his life was earnestness, and his work was of the highest order; and the authors of his biography have done their work well. They show us the man himself—they tellingly narrate the incidents of his life, and they give us a charming view of the worker and his work."—Batley News.

Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 2s. 6d.

HENRY MOORHOUSE,

THE ENGLISH EVANGELIST.

BY REV. J. MACPHERSON,
Author of "The Christian Hero," &c.

WITH LITHOGRAPHIC PORTRAIT.

"The book is a well-written account of a fruitful life, which we commend to the earnest study of all young Evangelists and labourers in the Lord's vineyard. . . . His ministry was helpful to thousands; and among the many who gladly acknowledged much spiritual help thereby is no less distinguished a preacher than Mr. D. L. Moody, who has again and again testified to the great impetus he received in his Christian life and work through the plain Scriptural preaching of Henry Moorhouse."—Footsteps of Truth.

"His life, as here recorded, is one of the most instructive and most stimulating in our language. Young men ought to eagerly devour this volume. Its perusal must benefit them in many ways. Christian workers will find it full of useful hints."—Oldham Chronicle.

Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d. Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

DUNCAN MATHESON,

THE SCOTTISH EVANGELIST.

BY REV. J. MACPHERSON.

"No Christian can read it without profit. It is calculated to instruct and encourage such of God's servants as make the labour of saving souls the business of their life."—Methodist Family.

"This is a soul-stirring book, and will repay him who shall purchase and read it. Matheson was truly a man of God; devoted to the work of saving souls, wherever and whenever opportunity presented itself. He was a Christian and evangelical labourer worthy of the most worthy imitation."

Lay Preacher.

"The life of a real man, consecrated in life and full of zeal for the Lord. This biography will not only interest, but benefit a wide circle of readers. We are right glad to see so worthy a memorial of so worthy a man."

REV. C. H. SPURGEON, in The Sword and Trowel.

MARY LYON.

RECOLLECTIONS OF A NOBLE WOMAN.

BY FIDELIA FISKE.

"Those who seek to become familiar with the lives of noble women, lovers for Christ's sake of their kind, will be deeply interested in this little volume."—Watchman.

"It is a book well fitted to stir up to greater zeal and activity in the Christian cause in whatever sphere God enables us to work."

Christian Work.

"The book is a study for teachers, and still more for all who wish to exercise spiritual influence over others, consecrating their work as teachers to the noblest end."—Freeman.

"A biography worthy to be written, and a book well written."

Wesleyan Advocate.

Tinted Covers, 6d. Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d. Cloth Elegant, suitable for Presentation, 3s. 6d.

FIDELIA FISKE.

THE STORY OF A CONSECRATED LIFE.

BY REV. W. GUEST.

"Here is truth stranger and more thrilling than fiction, the incidents of a missionary career which are to the glory of God and of His truth."

Sword and Trowel.

"A simple and well-told story of a beautiful and successful Christian life, and is well fitted to be extremely useful."—English Independent.

"Very well written, and contains many highly interesting details, some of them quite out of the common order."—The Watchman.

"The story traces a life of signal usefulness, a beautiful example of the benign influence of an unselfish, loving, sanctified nature. Teachers will find in it much to suggest inquiry as to motive and mode of action; the causes and means of spiritual success."—Sunday School Teacher.

THE CONVERSION OF CHILDREN.

BY REV. E. P. HAMMOND, M.A.,

Author of "Familiar Talks with the Children," "The Better Life," &c.

Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

REVIEWS.

"We devoutly wish that by some means or other a copy could be placed in the hands of every Sunday-school superintendent and every pastor of a church."
Penuel.

"We commend the book very heartily to the prayerful attention of all parents and teachers.—The Freeman.

"We are quite sure that this book is well calculated to encourage effort and stimulate the Church to diligence in this direction."—The Methodist.

"Many remarkable facts are here given, which deserve the attention of those especially who are incredulous as to the early age at which children may begin to live consciously a Christian life."
Evangelical Christendom.

"'Here we have gold dust, 'and the gold of that land is good.' We hardly know a man more noteworthy for abounding grace and deep piety than Robert C. Chapman. His name has never been sounded abroad, but those who know him value him beyond expression. Some of these brief 'Sayings,' contain whole sermons. Personally, we expect to gather many discourses while studying this little book. A dew from heaven rests upon Mr. CHAPMAN'S expositions."

FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS.

A Complete and Authentic Account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Triumphant Deaths of Primitive and Protestant Martyrs in all parts of the world. By JOHN FOXE. With TWELVE FULL-PAGE ILLUSTRATIONS.

"We most heartily recommend this New Edition of Foxe's famous work. It is a wonderful compilation. Contains nearly 1,100 pages, elegant in its binding, and is remarkably cheap."—Protestant Standard.

"Messrs. Morgan and Scott deserve most cordial thanks for the production of this noble edition of a noble book, and we are specially pleased to observe that the aid of pictorial art has been invoked to attract to the volume the attention of the young. Only let this book have a place in every British home, and we may smile at the efforts of Rome, and of the Anglican Ritualists to undo the blessed work which was achieved for our nation, and for the world, by the thousands of faithful witnesses to the truth who in dark days of priestly domination resisted unto death."—Christian Leader.

"The book is a marvel of cheapness. It contains more than 1,000 pages of closely but legibly-printed matter, and many well-executed illustrations. If there were in the volume no more than a complete copy of Foxe's great work, it would be well worth its price; but we find in addition an elaborate and vigorous essay on Popery, by Rev. Ingram Cobbin, an instructive and interesting Life of Foxe himself, and an Appendix which brings down the history of the persecution of Protestant Christians to the year 1837."

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE

to the Old and New Testaments. MORGAN & SCOTT'S ILLUSTRATED EDITION.

The special features of this Edition are the New Translation of the Proper Names of the Old and New Testaments, with their meanings in the Original Languages, and the following twelve exquisite Steel Plate Engravings—

SAMARIA.	MOUNT TABOR.	SHECHEM—SYCHAR.
ELISHA'S FOUNTAIN,	TYRE.	TIBERIAS.
JERICHO.	HEBRON.	BETHANY.
REPHIDIM.	JERUSALEM FROM THE	ATHENS.
DAMASCUS.	SOUTH.

And Six Beautifully Coloured Maps.

Speaking of the Steel Plate Engravings, the Rev. H. B. TRISTRAM, LL.D., Canon of Durham, says:—

"I have never seen any engravings equal to these for the purposes of Biblical Illustration. True to existing nature, exact in outline, beautiful in execution, they leave nothing to be desired. Knowing the country so well, I am pleased to have my recollections refreshed by the minuteness of detail, in which engravings got up for illustration so frequently fall short."

Complete in One Volume, handsomely bound in cloth, gilt top, 10s. 6d.

CONVERSION, SERVICE, AND GLORY.

A Volume suitable for Presentation, or for the Library. By D. L. MOODY. Containing—

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

PHTHISIS.—CASE of Miss ANNIE DOLBY, of PETERBOROUGH.

This patient came to Coombe Lodge Feb. 21 of this year. Report on examination:—"Phthisis, the apex of right lung and base of the left lung diseased, very feeble respiration all down the right lung."

The patient's mother and one sister had died of decline. She had been subject herself to winter cough. For several months she had been worse, and was losing flesh and strength. All the usual symptoms were present, in addition to which dropsical swellings of the legs and feet had appeared.

The patient continued to receive medicine and advice by letter for several months, after which she writes me, from "Orton Longueville, Peterborough, June 4," and says:—"I feel in duty bound to write and thank you much for your kind advice. My doctor in Peterborough examined me yesterday and pronounced my lungs free from disease, and said great credit was due to whoever had been attending me; it had been most wisely and carefully done. I am seeking to take a situation again. I have been recommending your treatment.—Yours gratefully, A. D."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

"That affliction of every kind appointed by God is 'for our profit, that we may be partakers of his holiness,' is too obvious to need to be insisted upon, and to most Christians it will be equally obvious that no kind of affliction tends more to produce this result than bodily pain and weakness endured in faith."

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

CLOSE OF THIRTY-THIRD YEAR'S WORK.

At the beginning of this year there were One Hundred and Ninety-two Young Women and Girls in the Homes and Open-All-Night Refuge, and up to November 26, One Thousand Three Hundred and Six have applied for admission, representing every condition of the virtuous friendless in distress, as well as the outcast of every grade. Irrespective of the fluctuations of income, every suitable case has been welcomed!

The Work necessarily involves a large current expenditure. I therefore beg the prompt, practical, liberal co-operation of every Reader of THE CHRISTIAN, in this effort to close my thirty-third year's work, on behalf of the poor young women and girls, without the burden of any outstanding liability for the work of 1884.

TRAINING AND CONVALESCENT HOME, THE LIMES, FELTHAM.

Dear Friends,

The present is a time of extreme need. I therefore most earnestly solicit contributions, feeling sure that I have only to make our position known, to enlist your aid and sympathy; especially as I plead for the helpless little ones who fill our homes, and who but for the shelter afforded would be in circumstances too sad to contemplate. May He to whom the silver and the gold belong, incline your hearts to send speedy and liberal aid, so that we may, as in former times, realise that the Lord is our help in time of trouble.

Yours in the Master's service,

MARIE HILTON.

In thanking the readers of THE CHRISTIAN for the help kindly given of late, both for Missionary purposes, and also for the "Holiday Cottage," may we plead for help again for

1. BOW COMMON.

An earnest band of voluntary Christian workers in Devon's Road having cast their lot amongst us, we have taken on lease, with option of purchasing the freehold, a large warehouse of three floors. The ground floor, with few alterations, and roof over yard, will furnish a Hall for 800 souls.

Having obtained possession last week, we quickly made the first floor wind and water tight, and, helped with a large quantity of old seats from a tent, we opened this floor for the Gospel Lord's Day last, and three souls were the precious first fruits.

We are now waiting upon the Lord for about £300 for the necessary alterations. The accommodation this would furnish for the various activities of love's best service encourages us to look for a speedy assistance.

2. FOR TEMPORAL DISTRESS.

The destitution at Cubitt Town (on the banks of the Thames) and around other of our Mission Halls is very severe.

Our Evangelist in the neighbourhood of the Docks writes this week to say he cannot withhold giving bread, and asking if he can commence soup-making; but our hands are empty. May some to whom He has given of His rich store hear His voice in this: "Give ye them to eat." We will gladly be your almoners.

3. FOR GENERAL PURPOSES.

Friends will see by the Cash Statement that for general purposes we were over a hundred pounds behind on the date of our annual audit, and this has rather increased since. We are, however, not discouraged, though it is not consoling to see the figures gradually growing bigger on the wrong side, as they have done these past two years.

It rejoices us, nevertheless, to ask praise for the continued spiritual prosperity enjoyed, and the souls that are being given us in our labour from week to week.

We will gladly send our little Report for three stamps to any friend requiring.

Yours in the Lord's work,

2, MARQUESS GROVE, CANONBURY, N. WILLIAM CHORLEY.

CHEAPNESS AND COMPETITION.

"And Asa in the thirty and ninth year of his reign was diseased in his feet, until his disease was exceeding great: yet in his disease he sought not to the Lord, but to the physicians."—2 Chron. xvi. 12.

THE Poet Laureate tells us in "Locksley Hall" that he

"Dipt into the future, far as human eye could see,
Saw the Vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be;
Saw the heavens fill with commerce, argosies of magic sails,
Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales. . .
Till the war-drum throbbed no longer, and the battle-flags were furled,
In the Parliament of man, the federation of the world."

Very different from this is the view presented to the Seer of Patmos. His vision of the future took in the utter and disastrous collapse of a commercial system which was then only in its infancy. He heard a mighty angel, with whose glory the earth was lightened, cry with a loud voice, "Babylon the great is fallen! is fallen!" There is a religious Babylon, of which Rome is the centre; but this is commercial Babylon, of which we may say that London is the centre. Just as religious Babylon represents a system, so commercial Babylon represents a system, over the ruin of which "the merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn; for no man buyeth their merchandise any more: the merchandise of gold, and silver, and precious stones, and of pearls, and fine linen, and purple, and silk, and scarlet, and all thyine wood, and all manner vessels of ivory, and all manner vessels of most precious wood, and of brass, and iron and marble, and cinnamon, and odours, and ointments and frankincense, and wine, and oil, and fine flour, and wheat, and beasts, and sheep, and horses, and chariots, AND SLAVES, AND SOULS OF MEN."

That commercial system which is the pride and boast of modern Christendom is doomed. All who trade by sea will weep and wail saying, "Alas, alas, that great city, wherein were made rich all that had ships on the sea by reason of her costliness! for in one hour is she made desolate. Her merchants were the great men of the earth; by her sorceries were all nations deceived." She is the same in essence and in spirit as religious Babylon, for "in her was found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth."

How graphically and how truly does the Divine Artist conclude the catalogue of her merchandise with "the bodies and souls of men,"—of men (and the generic term includes women and children) for whom the Son who is in the bosom of the Father came into the world and died.

Let us look for a moment at two of the leading principles of Commerce—Cheapness and Competition.

Speaking to the constituency whose suffrages he was seeking, a popular candidate recently said that he should like to see literature much cheaper, that the people might read at less cost than they can do now. About the same time a paper, representing the same school of politics, applauded the "trade union," which maintains a certain scale of prices, and censured those who employ men at a lower scale. Now these two ideas of the same school are irreconcilable. The cheapening of any product of labour necessitates the reduction of wages. Which, we ask, is right, the candidate who advocates cheapness, or the editor who advocates a high rate of wages? * This is certain, cheapness gives an increased value to the money of the non-workers. If commodities are cheap, their gold will buy the more; therefore cheapness is the reverse of a benefit to the working part of the population. Increased cheapness means for them more to do and less for doing it.

Cheapness is like a mill, which not only takes in and tears apart the raw material, and dresses it, and weaves it into the manufactured article, but takes in also, and tears to pieces or grinds to powder, the sprightliness of childhood, the grace of girlhood, the modesty of womanhood, the nobleness of manhood, and weaves into the pattern of the goods the record of the wrongs of the oppressed. As George Holland said, a few nights ago, "On the shelves of warehouses in the City are goods which have been wet with the tears of those who made them."

And into the same mill goes also much of what is done by way of charity. If the benevolent were to send so much money into destitute London that every poor family of workers could be given half a crown a-week, this would soon be swallowed up by the inveterate sweater, Cheapness. The middleman would turn the screw; for it is evident that if their wages were reduced by eighteenpence, the toilers would still be a shilling better off than before, and the twin demon of Competition, taking advantage of the crowded labour market, would speedily give the screw still another turn, so that the remaining shilling would follow the eighteenpence.

Cheapness and Competition keep down the wages of those who are at work, and adopt every contrivance that ingenuity and experience can invent to employ as few as possible, though non-employment means, especially to the weaker sex, temptation, sin, and ruin of the most terrible kind.

The body politic, like King Asa, is diseased in its feet—the working part of the population. The disease, like that of Asa, has become exceedingly great. Asa knew it, recognised it, and sought not to the Lord, but to the physicians. In the case of the body politic, the physicians are the political economists. But they have worked no cure, and confessedly are able to work none. They say that this exceeding great disease is the result of natural and inevitable law, and "what can't be cured must be endured." But a body diseased in its feet must fall; and to know oneself diseased is half the cure. We, therefore, press the above facts upon our Christian readers, that we may carry them to the Lord, the Healer, who is able to heal us of this exceeding great and dangerous disease.

There is no more radical cause for the indisposition of the toiling classes to hear the Gospel than their want of confidence in the righteousness, as well as sympathy, of Christians toward themselves. When the pulpit resounds with rebuke of all advantage taken of the poor, shows up the evil, and calls the people of God to continued and fervent prayer for his deliverance, the people will believe in them, which is an essential preliminary to their believing the Gospel which they preach.

* We do not now discuss the question of trades unions. Workmen and employers have each a right to combine; but trades unionism sometimes becomes a cruel and unreasoning tyranny.

CHILDHOOD IN THE CITY.

("Surplus Population!")

WITH pallid faces, worn with toil and care,
They slowly tramp through dim, damp streets [at morn;
Wan little faces, sad and sweetly fair,
As opening flow'rets when the day is born.

With weary footsteps, lingering and slow, [loud,
They haste to where the wheels whirl sharp and Tired little footsteps, halting through the snow
Which dimly gleams below the smoky cloud.

With tiny hands full early cramped by toil,
They pass to work when factory bells do ring;
Poor, hardened hands, which never from the soil
Pluck daisies paling with the kiss of spring.

With eyelids heavy with a weight of sleep
They turn from daily toil at set of sun,
Rejoicing as to distant courts they creep,
"Thank God, another weary day is done!"

No ocean gleaming in the sun see they;
The slums their fields, the black canals their streams;
Their hopeless life is but a dull, drear day,
A night dark with the wings of dismal dreams.

One faithful Friend have they who lingers nigh,
And from our streets He leads them far away;
But o'er their early death let no one sigh,
In Paradise on them breaks perfect day.

These "surplus" little ones are they who fill
The shortest graves beneath the pauper's sod;
For tired of hunger, pain, and noisy mill,
They go to spend eternity with God.

James Bowker.

INTERCESSION FOR MISSIONS.—Tuesday last week was observed as a day of prayer for Foreign Missions in connection with the Episcopalian Church. The Oxford correspondent of The Record says that little interest seemed to be felt in the subject there.

"FOR MY SAKE."—In a recent letter to a friend, Mrs. Meuricoffe, of Naples, gives some of her experiences of the recent cholera visitation in that city. She says:—"I became very much attached to those devoted 'Sisters' at the Hospital della Maddalena. As I was the only lady there, I was thrown entirely with them, and learnt many a precious lesson from them. I went at first to see the English sailors at the 'Salle,' which was engaged as an annex to our International Hospital, as of course cholerics were not allowed to be taken to ordinary hospitals. The first time I felt so frightened that my tongue clave to the roof of my mouth; but I took for my watchword the text: 'Whoso will save his life shall lose it; but whoso will lose his life for my sake, shall save it,' and I was not afraid again, and spent many an hour there quite happily, separated from all the world."

THE BOOK OF PSALMS.

[The following paper, read by a young lady before a Mutual Improvement Society, will interest and instruct the elder and more thoughtful of our young readers, and perhaps incite some of them to prepare similar papers on other books, or on individuals mentioned in the Bible.]

THE title "Book of Psalms" is not derived from the Hebrew (which simply means "Praises"), but our authority for adopting it is of the highest character. It is the Septuagint title. We find (Luke xx. 42) that our Lord used it when addressing Jews, and hence may justly conclude that even then in Palestine "The Book of Psalms" was a current designation. In Acts i. 20, the Apostle Peter is recorded to have referred to it under the same name, and St. Paul, in the synagogue of Antioch in Pisidia, calls one of the 150 poems of which it is composed a "Psalm." This sacred collection displays the two most characteristic styles of Hebrew poetry, viz., the Lyrical and Didactic; in other words, (1) poetry composed under the inspiration of, or expressly to be set to, music, and (2) poetry used as a "medium for the communication of wise maxims and moral instructions." Without doubt the book was largely composed and expressly compiled for liturgical use. So as "Psalm" is a Greek word, meaning a song with a musical accompaniment, the title "Book of Psalms" is on the whole satisfactory. "Praises," on the other hand, is not equally suggestive of the contents; indeed, in the actual superscriptions only one poem (Psalm cxlv.) is called "Praise," whereas the Hebrew equivalent of "Psalm" occurs in many of the inscriptions prefixed to David's pieces. Another name for the Book, which also "refers to the form, rather than the spirit or religious character, of the compositions," is "the Psalter." This we have received through the Vulgate from the LXX.

If, as is generally admitted by critics, Psalm xc. was written by Moses near the end of the wilderness wanderings (1489 B.C.), and some pieces of the collection were not added until the time of Ezra the Scribe (444 B.C.), the authorship of this book extends over a period of about 1000 years.

In the Hebrew and Septuagint the Psalter is divided into five books. These may be traced in our Authorised Version by the Doxologies with which they terminate. Thus the books with their Doxologies are as follows:—

Book I., Psalms i.—xli. "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel from everlasting and to everlasting. Amen and Amen."

Book II., Psalms xlii.—lxxii. "Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things. And blessed be his glorious name for ever; and let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Amen and Amen."

Book III., Psalms lxxiii.—lxxxix. "Blessed be the Lord for evermore. Amen and Amen."

Book IV., Psalms xc.—cvi. "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel from everlasting to everlasting: and let all the people say Amen."

Book V. consists of forty-four Psalms, of which the last, Psalm cl., is itself a prolonged Doxology.

Some people entertain the fanciful notion that this fivefold division of the Psalter was made in imitation of the Pentateuch; but, carefully examined, these books may be seen to be collections compiled at different dates, each having its own distinctive characteristics.

Of the forty-one Psalms composing the first Book, thirty-seven are in the superscriptions ascribed to David, and the internal evidence mostly supports this authority. Psalms i., ii., x., and xxxiii. are the only ones of the Collection which are anonymous. Psalm i. is supposed to have been prefaced to the Psalter by the final editor, possibly Ezra.

Psalm ii. is strikingly similar in tone to cx., and is stated by the Apostles to be David's. Psalm x., as in the Septuagint, probably forms with ix. one acrostic psalm. The inclusion of Psalm xxxiii., which is the only other anonymous poem in this Book, may be accounted for by its first verse being a recapitulation of the last verse of xxxii., "Rejoice in the Lord ye righteous."

Of the thirty-seven psalms attributed herein to David, critics assert that Psalms vii. and xi. are the earliest, because of the archaisms in the style. The word we have translated "temple" in Psalm xi. 4 means "palace." It is otherwise rendered "house" in Joshua vi. 24, and 2 Samuel xii. 20, and is distinctly used for the tabernacle in 1 Samuel i. 9. It is interesting to know that Psalms xv. and xxiv. are believed "to have been composed by David for the great festival when he brought the ark into the tabernacle at Zion."

Psalm xix. (that exquisite poem which sets forth the glories of God's two first revelations of Himself to the world, first, by his works, and, second, by his Word) is attributed, as also the well-beloved 23rd Psalm, to the second period of the "Sweet Psalmist of Israel's" compositions between his accession to the throne and his fall.

NOTES ON SCRIPTURE.—21.

"Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God."—Phil. ii. 6.

THE revised translation of this important verse is a manifest improvement on the authorised one. Few passages in the New Testament, if any, more needed a new and truer rendering. There is a palpable difference between the "thought it not robbery to be equal with God" of the former, and "counted it not a prize to be on an equality with God" of the Revised Version.

The former makes St. Paul inform us what the Redeemer thought of his own greatness and glory, while the latter declares his willingness to lay aside what of right was his as being co-equal with the Father. The latter rendering, which represents the Apostle rather as informing us that the Son of God was prepared to forego for a season what belonged to Him for our salvation's sake, than as revealing his thoughts concerning Himself, adds greatly to the force of his exhortation to humility; whereas the former contributes no such force to it. It seems, moreover, somewhat out of harmony with the fitness of things, so to speak, for even an inspired writer to touch on such a topic as the Son of God's idea of his own rightful claims. The Revised Version relieves us of this difficulty without taking aught from the passage as one of the many which prove the Saviour's proper Deity.

The wording of this new rendering of the sense of the passage would perhaps be improved by substituting for "counted it not a prize" the expression "counted it not dear." But as it stands in the Revised Version the passage correctly conveys the Apostle's meaning, which was to intimate what Christ was willing to do, and actually did, for the purpose of our redemption.

THE LONDON SCHOOL BOARD AND OVER-PRESSURE.

THE London School Board, after a wearisome discussion, has at length resolved, by a majority of four votes, to appoint a Special Committee to enquire into the allegations of over-pressure in the Board's schools. The decision so tardily taken will be welcomed by all who take an interest in this vitally-important question; for, without doubt, a fear had taken hold of the public mind that the Board regarded the children placed in its charge too much in the light of grant-earning machines, and were indifferent to the cry heard on all sides, that these poor children were being cruelly over-pressed.

Notwithstanding reiterated statements of teachers, parents, and medical men, that health, and even life, were being ground out of many of the pupils in elementary schools, in order to meet the excessive requirements of an exacting Education Code, the Education Department, school inspectors, and School Board members, either pooh-poohed the whole thing, or characterised the assertions as gross exaggerations, put forward by persons who were opposed to the spread of education among the children of the poor. In these circumstances it became absolutely necessary that a full and searching inquiry into the matter should be undertaken by either the Educational Department or some other constituted authority.

It would undoubtedly have given more satisfaction if the Educational Department had consented to the appointment of an independent committee to carry on the investigation in connection with the whole of the public elementary schools of the country, whether Board or Voluntary. As it is, the present inquiry will be necessarily limited to the Board Schools of the Metropolis. A glance at the names of the fifteen members constituting the Board's Committee will inspire a considerable amount of confidence, but it is a very regrettable circumstance that a motion, brought forward by Sir E. H. Currie for obtaining the services of eminent members of the medical profession, was lost. The subject of inquiry seems to be peculiarly one in which the evidence of medical experts would be of the greatest possible value. The relations between food and work, the necessity of supplying nutriment to the brain as well as to other organs of the body, the causes and symptoms of brain disorders—these are matters on which much light could be thrown by those who have made them their special study, and it is difficult to see how they can ultimately be excluded from the scope of the Committee's inquiry.

The attitude of the Press and the public should now be one of patient watchfulness; and it is highly desirable on many grounds that the Committee should get through their labours with as much expedition as is consistent with a full and searching investigation. It is impossible to forecast the result; it would be a serious misfortune if it should be found necessary to limit the education, which is the birthright of every child in the land; it would be a still greater calamity if the physical and mental well-being of any section of the rising generation should be sacrificed to the requirements of any system of admininistering the grant for education in this country.

One thing can scarcely be doubted; if the inquiry be thorough, it cannot fail to reveal an amount of poverty and wretchedness and misery in this vast Metropolis that will open the eyes of the thoughtful among us, and tax all the efforts of all our philanthropists to ameliorate.

"I WAS AN HUNGERED."

By GEO. LITTLEMORE.

"EVERY man is wanted," says Emerson, "and no man is wanted very much." One of the speakers at a six o'clock breakfast told the hopeless-looking men before him, as an argument against despair, that the fact of their being in God's world was a proof that they were wanted. But, looking upon these poor folk, one had "to make believe very much" before he could receive the first part of the Emersonian dictum, "Every man is wanted." If these two hundred persons had been found dead in the streets instead of asleep, there would have been an agonising paragraph in the next morning's paper, and a little uplifting of hands in horror, and then the streets would have been clear to accommodate another two hundred.

"There is no help for it," says the philosophic reader; "these are the chips which necessarily fall about the stately figure of civilisation as it is being shaped into beauty." Those who can believe that there is no help for it cannot at the same time believe that the Son of Man will judge the world, saying, "I was an hungered, and ye gave Me no meat; a stranger, and ye took Me not in."

It is indeed a comfort to fall back upon philosophic reflections when, after one has done his utmost to mitigate the misery of Christ's poor, the sum of it seems almost as great as it was before he began; but to > "sit still in easy chairs,

> And damn the general world for standing up," comforting ourselves meanwhile with philosophic reflections, is a course of action attended by quite fatal consequences.

It was with a sad heart that one went homeward to his own breakfast-table, and with mingled feelings that one looked round upon the children, fresh from their sleep and rosy from their bath. In the forty winks that one snatched in the train homewards, the scene which had been left behind arose once more and troubled the sleeper; and for a second time he mounted the platform and addressed the congregation of God's poor somewhat in this fashion:—

"Poor, hungry guests, who stagger in the rear of our beautiful civilisation—you, the 'hindermost,' whom our pitiless philosophy has abandoned to the fate which awaits the 'hindermost,'—perhaps if some of us could see the thing aright, your misery and pain are sacrificial; and you, in other worlds and in other lives, may come to see of the travail of your souls and be satisfied. Your sacrifice is not in vain, for the cross on which ye are lifted up is so fearful a sight to some of us, that we go to and fro in the city beating upon our breasts. Already we are beginning to be ashamed of our 'comfortable Christianity.' We cannot sit at our feasts except blindfolded to shut out the offensive vision of Lazarus and his sores. We wear our purple and fine linen apologetically.

> "'Ye have great allies;
> Your friends are exultations, agonies,
> And love, and man's unconquerable mind.'

"Some of us are beginning to be ashamed of putting you off with alms, when we should give you healing; with charity, when your right is justice. And some of us who do not love you are beginning at least to be afraid of you—to fear that you may come in upon us like a flood and sweep all our pleasant things away, or blow us into the heavens by the explosive force of your righteous discontent, and the assertion of your injured manhood. But there are more of us who love you, injured friends, than you will readily believe—noble, tender hearts, which bleed inwardly in pity for you, and who are asking how to help you best; who would give you not breakfasts only, but their own souls also; who are groping their way out of theories which their consciences feel to be inhuman, and out of falsehoods of every kind, towards the actual truth, which is the basis of all right human relationship; and who are awaiting that one word of direction which shall be the signal of all effective benevolent operation, and the beginning of the blessed work of judgment and of mercy."—The Congregationalist.

AN APPEAL FROM THE LAND OF SINIM.

OUR hearts are burdened with a sense of the spiritual need and destitution of the peoples in this land. We have in this province of Yunnan a population probably not less than 5,000,000 souls, including several races. The Chinese portion mostly inhabit the cities and plains; the Lo-lo, Mias-tzi, Pa-i, Ming-Kia, and other tribes, inhabit the mountainous districts.

The work of regular evangelisation of this province was really commenced three years ago, when Mr. and Mrs. George Clarke rented a house at Ta-li Fu, amidst great opposition.

Previously, journeys had been taken in the province, long intervals of time intervening, by Messrs. McCarthy, Cameron, Broumton, and Trench, and by Messrs. Stevenson and Henry Soltau, of this Mission, also by Mr. Wilson, of the National Bible Society of Scotland; about half the towns of the province in all were visited. But what is a single passing visit of a missionary, perhaps only staying a day?

The Lo-lo, Miao-tzi, Pa-i, Ming-Kia, and other aboriginal tribes are as yet, in this province, totally untouched. Their languages have not yet been acquired, and have to be reduced to writing; most of them have no written language. Of others the art of writing has become extinct, or nearly so. These people only imperfectly understand Chinese.

Two years ago the Lord enabled us to rent a small house in this city, the capital of the province, about 250 miles from Ta-li Fu, thus making the second Mission station for an area of twice that of England and Wales. Mr. Andrew and myself made several tours in the more central districts. Then Mr. and Mrs. Clarke left the Ta-li Fu station in charge of Mr. Andrew for nine months, and came here; and thus this city had the advantage of their testimony. Then they returned to Ta-li Fu, and the Lord has since called Mrs. Clarke to his own immediate presence.

In January of this year I was enabled to come here accompanied by Mrs. Eason. The Lord has given us favour with the people, and many have heard of the Saviour of the world. But we are tied on every hand from extending our work for want of more labourers. Doors are open, but we cannot enter. This year we have been gladdened by the addition of two brethren, one for Ta-li Fu, and the other here. But they have not yet acquired the language sufficiently to take a real share of the work for some time yet.

There are towns not far from here that could be taken up as out-stations, and I have visited a few lately, but we must have more labourers before we can commence regular work in these places.

The people everywhere in Yunnan are very friendly, notwithstanding the war just over the border with the French—not more than 250 miles south of this place. The events in Tonkin may open a door for us to enter there, and commence work for the Lord, and may also open up a quicker and better route to these parts and enable us to enter among the Eastern Laos. Parts of this province have a lovely climate—very mild and dry, and not excessively hot in summer. For the greater portion of the year we have most glorious sunshine. Climate need not be made an objection for anyone desiring to come out here to work for Christ.

I want to plead with brethren and sisters in Christ to consider if the Lord Jesus has not a claim on some of them for the evangelisation of these multitudes of perishing souls. Perishing they certainly are: where is the heathen that acts up to the light of nature? A few there may be attempting it in some measure, but very, very few. The masses are sunk in awful degradation and sin. Unless the direct power of God, through the Gospel, is brought to them they must perish from the very state they are in. Christians nowadays seem to overlook these facts. "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord."

We cannot throw the responsibility upon God. God hath committed to his people the Gospel of reconciliation. It is written, "God will have all men to be saved, and to come to a knowledge of the truth." The responsibility rests with the Church of God—with every individual member of his body. It is urgent, awfully urgent, upon us to consider our calling

How many believers there are who are entirely taken up with feeding their own spiritual life, forgetting the danger of others! How utterly contrary to the love of Jesus such a character is. He came not to be ministered unto, but to minister. What fatalists many of us are in practice! It is promised to the Son of God, "He shall have the heathen for his inheritance." Eighteen hundred years have gone by since He Himself gave command to "Go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." And yet to-day it is computed there are 800,000,000 without the light of the Gospel.

How many Christian young men, because they have business ability, and God has given them success in their business, consider that an evidence that God has not called them to give themselves entirely for the spreading of the knowledge of the Gospel. These successful ones are the very men God requires for such service. If you were not successful in your temporal affairs, how could you consider God had entrusted you with his greater riches? (Luke xvi. 12). It needs all the ability of the best quality for this highest of all earthly service.

Who will come and join us? God is faithful, what shall we fear? I shall eternally praise God for calling me here. We have put our trust in the Lord Jehovah, and He has never failed us, and we know He never will. We do not look to the Mission treasury for the supply of our need; the Lord himself is our treasurer. Are you afraid to trust Him who sendeth none on a warfare at his own charges? He will care for you.

And are there not some to whom the Lord has entrusted wealth, or at least sufficient means to maintain themselves, who might easily come? Why did the Lord give you these means? It does not require £100 a year for one to live comfortably here.

Many say they have no call to go. May I suggest a question? Is your occupying the position you fill an absolute necessity? Are you sure God has called you to remain at home? Have you thoroughly considered the question? Or, may you not be resisting God? Are you obeying Him? I entreat you consider this. ARTHUR EASON.

SELF-SUPPORTING MISSIONS.

A book by Bishop Taylor, entitled, "Ten Years of Self-supporting Missions in India," abounds in valuable information, and is suggestive of important ideas in relation to modern evangelistic enterprise. It should be widely circulated just now.* Facts such as he adduces and arguments he employs require to be generally known and considered, the facilities for Gospel work all over the world being far greater than many suppose. The commercial fleets of England and America have deposited, and are depositing, vast numbers of men speaking our language, and bearing the Christian name, along the coasts of all heathen and semi-heathen lands. Multitudes of these settle down in heathen countries, and furnish resources and agencies for the establishment of self-supporting Missions that the Church is strangely slow to take advantage of. To reach these should be one of the great aims of missionary work, so as to utilise them in the service of Christ, just as Paul laid hold of the fact of Jewish dispersion among the nations, and the wide diffusion of the Greek language for furthering the Gospel in the first stages of Christian effort.

Dr. Taylor asserts that the greatest drawback at the present hour is the superficial character of church work in Christian countries. He says: "If any manufacturer of any sort should have as much bogus, shoddy and sham on the market bearing his trade-mark as may be found in the popular churches of to-day, it would smash his business in six months. The fact that the Church lives and advances, in spite of such disabilities, demonstrates the marvellous conservative power of the true Gospel salt contained in it." It is "the remnant who keep the commandments of God and have the testimony of Jesus," that God uses to hold the Church together, and make the grand conquests she is making. What would be done if only all our church membership was sanctified and meet for the Master's use?

The principles advocated in Dr. Taylor's book are certainly revolutionary, so far as the received idea of Mission work through organised societies is concerned, but their scripturalness is evident to those who read his argument. He avers that God's original Pauline way of planting Missions does not come legitimately within the province of the charity principle on which all missionary societies are founded, and that with all the wisdom and piety possible they are as poorly adapted to founding self-supporting Missions, and to the nurture of native churches, as the grand charity institutions of our country are adapted to the construction and running of railroads. Fully recognising and appreciating what has been done by existing societies, the Bishop argues, and it must be admitted soundly, "that what God requires now is a railroad company, with right of way, to bear at least its proportion of responsibility in carrying the Gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth on Paul's original business principles." Without in any way interfering with useful and time-honoured agencies now at work, very much more may, and ought to be done in this latter direction.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY have closed a series of two days' Conventions, held in several of the larger cities in the State of New York. These Conventions have been most abundantly owned of the Lord, in the reviving and consecration of his people and the conversion of many of the unsaved. In response to a very earnest invitation from Christians in Toronto, the evangelists were to hold a three days' Convention in that city on Dec. 2—4.

THE SPARROWS.*

"FIVE FOR TWO FARTHINGS."

A LITTLE while ago I was at an exhibition of paintings. The walls of the large room were quite covered with beautiful landscapes and portraits, and flower and fruit pieces; but one small picture in a corner attracted more attention than many much larger ones with very celebrated names signed to them, though it was only a simple little work. It had a story to tell, and it spoke of something with which almost every person present was familiar: for it represented a sheet of snow beneath a hedgerow from which a poor frozen, tiny bird had fallen to die, the feathers rime-bound, and the claws twisted, and the eyes glazed in death.

"Poor little thing!" said several who looked at the picture, "poor little thing!" And as I listened to them, and remembered what a common thing a dead bird is in severe winters—when day after day the frozen snow lies thick upon the ground, the ponds and streams are covered with ice, the branches seem like frosted silver, and in the copses, robins, wrens, thrushes, and chaffinches, vainly hunt for a seed or a morsel of food—I could not help feeling sad for the little singers dying thus in the snow.

But when we see a dead bird it need not be all sadness; for we can call to mind the sweet words of Jesus, that lift the small birds, "the fowls of the air," into a higher place than most people who do not think are inclined to give them, a place within the wonderful all-circling love and daily care of God. "Are not five sparrows sold for two farthings?" Jesus said; "and not one of them is forgotten before God" (Luke xii. 6); or as it is given by St. Matthew (x. 29), "And one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father." The Bible has a word of comfort for every human sorrow, no matter how great or how small.

I daresay as our Lord and Master was speaking to the little crowd about Him, the sparrows were twittering and chirping in the roadway, for Palestine swarms with sparrows of the same kind as our field-sparrow. There are countless numbers of them on the plains of Gennesaret, and on the slopes of the Mount of Olives, the trees and shrubs being literally stuffed with their nests. Our house-sparrow is not found in the Holy Land; but there is one so like it that you could scarcely find out what the difference is, and it builds in the window-openings and beneath the roofs, and hops about with a cheery chirp all the day long. And if one has lost his mate, he sits mourning alone on the house-top, just as the Psalmist describes him in Ps. cii.† Travellers in Palestine say that they have seen flocks of thousands upon thousands of field and house-sparrows feeding upon the wild oats growing upon the sand-hills, and myriads of them hopping about; yet Jesus said that "not one is forgotten before God."

What a comfort in our loneliness, if ever we are lonely, to remember this wonderful love of God! Do you ever think of that pitiful tenderness of God, and how it encircles not only nations and tribes, but you and me, and the little birds, and the tiny things far beneath the birds? Looking through my microscope I often see mites, only the two-thousandth part of an inch in size: can you comprehend that? And not one of them "is forgotten before God."

I wonder if you ever, just before you fall asleep, think for a moment that unless God were to keep your heart beating about eighty times a minute, and your lungs inspiring and expiring air, all through the night—marvellous movements going on steadily without your consciousness—your eyes would not again open upon the beautiful sunlight.

That very awaking from sleep is a daily miracle requiring the power of God for its performance. And yet how few of us ever thank God for our awaking. We become so accustomed to all our daily mercies that we are apt to look upon them as ours by right; and, in many cases, it is only when they are withdrawn for awhile that we recognise that they are a gift.

The words of Jesus, "Ye are of more value than many sparrows," whisper to me the comforting assurance that my falling asleep and my awaking are matters of interest to God, because everything which concerns me and my well-being is of moment to my Heavenly Father; and, with all my experience of his wondrous love, the thought fills me with peaceful trust, and the thankfulness of an overflowing heart, a thankfulness that ought to break forth into singing.

There are times in the life of the sparrow when his usual little chirp is quite insufficient for him, and he must needs sing a low and sweet song. I do not suppose you ever heard him—for the chirp is for the crowd, and the song is sung before only very few; and not many hear it; perhaps because only few people take any notice of wild birds. But sing he does, simply because he is so happy he cannot help singing, just as a spring runs over when it is full.

I wish we all did likewise. What a cheery world it would be if, instead of the almost mechanical chirp of contentment most of us give over our daily mercies and blessings, we were to burst out now and again into songs of thanksgiving and grateful praise! Many of us have the gratitude in our hearts; but we do not allow it to well up in music to our lips. The other day, as we were coming down the slope of a great mountain in Wales, we heard the melody of a rippling stream: but we were a long time before we found the little rivulet, singing merrily on its way to the sea; hidden as it was, deep down in the heather and the giant bracken. It was not singing for people to hear it, but simply because it could not help it; and that is the sweetest music after all.

> "The wondrous story of the Lamb,
> Tell with that voice of thine,
> Till others, with the glad new song,
> Go singing all the time."

Sometimes when I have been in the woods, there has been almost a dead silence for awhile, and then a sweet little note would come from a leafy corner; and in a few moments the whole solitude would be ringing with bird music. One bird began it. And whenever there is a great burst of praise to God some one commences it, and the others follow.

Day by day our songs ought to rise to heaven, as we think of all that God gives us. Life, health, food, raiment, loving relatives and friends, sweet sunshine, and numberless enjoyments and blessings. Let us not forget "the duty of delight." We take our largest vessels to God's fountain of love, and when the cup is full and would overflow, He deepens its hollow and widens its brim, and adds to all our blessings a greater one than all the rest—that of eternal life in Christ. "For God so loved the world that He gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John iii. 16).

That "whosoever" is just as wide and deep as God's great Divine love; and not one of us, however small, need be outside it. If in the Father's heart there is room for care about the sparrows, surely there is room for you and for me—not merely because we are "of more value than many sparrows," but because Jesus loved us and gave Himself for us. And we can come to the Father in the Name and through the finished work of the Son.

And coming thus, the peace and the rest will be everlasting; for our coming will be covered by that other grand promise, that whosoever cometh He will "in no wise cast out."

BIBLE ACROSTIC.

The initials give a place which was the scene of a combat in the time of David.

(1) A city to which Israel was carried captive.
(2) One with whom the Lord was angry because he spoke not the thing that was right.
(3) The husband of a prophetess.
(4) The burial-place of Miriam.
(5) One who took a city, and sowed it with salt.
(6) A skilled workman in brass.
(7) A king of Zobah.
(8) A city of refuge.
(9) A man mighty in the Scriptures.
(10) A place near which the castings were made for the Temple.
(11) A priest who helped to carry the Ark.
(12) A city built by a woman.
(13) A woman saved by a sign.
(14) One of David's captains.
(15) A priest of Baal.

A NUMERICAL PUZZLE.

Multiply the number of people on the roof of the house in which Samson made sport, by the number of measures of barley Boaz gave to Ruth. Add the number of footmen slain by the Philistines after the ark was brought into the camp of Israel. Divide by the number of men slain by Jonathan and his armour-bearer while Saul was at Migron. Divide again by the number of men who joined David in the cave of Adullam. Multiply by the number of times Naaman dipped in Jordan. Subtract the number of camels carrying burdens that Benhadad sent to Elisha. Multiply by the number of Haman's sons. Divide by the number of young men who refused to touch Nebuchadnezzar's wine and meat. Subtract the number of disciples sent by Jesus to prepare the last passover. The remainder will be the number of people mentioned in the Old Testament as having been punished for their sins with leprosy, and whose names must be given. W. S. E.

FOREIGNERS IN LONDON.—1.

IT will be felt by every earnest Christian that England has a solemn duty to discharge, not only to the foreigners who dwell in our midst, but also to those who visit our shores from distant parts of the world and who sojourn amongst us from time to time.

To evangelise such foreigners a special agency is manifestly necessary, for the vast majority of regular clergy and ministers are unable to speak the divers languages of those who come to us. Few people are aware, perhaps, of the many thousands of French, Germans, Norwegians, Swedes, Russians, Spaniards, Italians, Asiatics, and Central Africans who are to be found in London every year.

The Committee of the London City Mission have long felt the necessity of doing something for the spiritual welfare of these strangers within our gates, and for many years nine of the society's missionaries have devoted their whole time to Christian effort amongst them. Nearly every religious error is represented by this foreign element in our midst. There are numerous Roman Catholics from Spain, Brazil, and the Manillas; Mahomedans from the banks of the Nile and Indus; Buddhists and idol worshippers from China and the banks of the Ganges; Materialists, Communists, Nihilists, from France, Russia, and Germany, all are met with by the missionaries, and instructed in the truths of Christianity.

This branch of the society's work is one of growing importance, but at the present time it is in need of pecuniary help. Our late beloved brother and member of the Foreigners' Committee, Mr. T. B. Smithies, was deeply interested in this work, and often encouraged the missionaries by his wise counsel and practical sympathy. When occupying the position of chairman at meetings he had called together on behalf of this Mission, his favourite portion of Scripture for reading was taken from the last chapter of the gospels of Mark and Luke, dwelling with much emphasis on the words "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," "beginning at Jerusalem." Since his departure to be with the Lord, this work has lost one of its most earnest and active supporters, and our prayer now is that others, like-minded, may be led to aid this Mission in its glorious work of making known the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ to the various classes of foreigners to be met with in the metropolis.

The large number of Christians who visited Denmark this year to attend the meetings of the Evangelical Alliance will be pleased to know that one of our missionaries has for many years been evangelising among Danes, Swedes, and Norwegians on board their respective vessels in the docks. His services have been greatly appreciated at the Christian Emigrants' Home, Blackwall, where he has been an active worker since its opening day, February 26, 1883. Of his work among foreigners at this Home, which is in every sense of the word a Christian Home, and admirably fitted up with every convenience for a large number of emigrants, we give a few notes.

"About 1032 Scandinavians, 44 Russians, 42 Dutch, 27 Italians, 89 Germans, and 3068 British Emigrants passed through the Home last year, staying from one to ten days. All of these were visited, and heard in their own tongue "the wonderful words of life." The Russians were a most interesting company of young men, and right gladly did they enjoy the reading of tracts and copies of The British Workman translated into their own language. This was a pleasure they little expected to meet with. Whilst reading to them one afternoon from John iii., two of the daughters of Count Bobrinskoy and one of the Hon. Misses Waldegrave entered the room. Having brought Russian hymns they sang to them, and afterwards exhorted them in a most affectionate manner to accept the Lord Jesus Christ and Him alone as their Saviour. They were most attentive and seemed deeply impressed.

The Dutch emigrants thankfully received the Word, and were visited by our Dutch missionary. The Italians, for the most part, received the copies of Scripture presented to them, and listened attentively to the Gospel. The Germans came directly under the personal teaching of the Superintendent of the Home, who is a warm-hearted evangelist, and himself of that nation.

Large numbers of Scandinavians were frequently at the Home, and it was indeed a great privilege to go in and out among them, speaking for the Master. Having had in their own land some religious training, their hearts were open to listen to the Word, and, praise the Lord, many received it and left the Home rejoicing.

In addition to personal visitation, as many as forty-four evangelistic services were held by the missionary in the Norwegian tongue, at some of which Lady Hobart, Lady Beauchamp, Lady Radstock, the Hon. Mr. Waldegrave, Mr. Trotter, Dr. Ziemann, Mr. Wilkie (the Superintendent), and others spoke by interpretation, and a translation of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's hymns was used.

At many of the meetings great blessing accompanied the preached Word. On one occasion there were about 100 present, who listened most attentively. The power of the Holy Ghost was very manifestly at work, for there were many in tears. At the close of the meeting there was much gratitude manifested in the simple shake of the hand, and "tak for iaften" (thanks for this evening's service). The people hung round the speaker and did not care to go to their quarters. More words were then spoken, and the meeting was turned into one for inquirers. Some soon found peace through trusting in the finished work of Christ.

The hour was getting late, and the missionary was just leaving, when a servant touched him on the shoulder, saying, "Don't go yet, sir, a young woman wishes to speak to you." He turned back, and found it was one in whose heart the Holy Spirit was evidently working. She could not leave without having another word. "Oh!" said she, "is there salvation for me? I have been such a wicked person; my sins are of the deepest dye, they are like mountains before me. Is there salvation for me?" The words of Jesus himself were then put before her, and the simple plan of salvation explained. She was then asked to kneel in prayer, at the close of which she arose, clapped her hands, and in a most joyous manner, said, "Jeg har det, jeg har det!" (I have it, I have it). The missionary asked, "What is it you have? "Fred med Gud" (peace with God), was her reply. "And how do you know that?" To which she replied, "Fordi Hans blod har renset mig fra al synd" (because his blood has cleansed me from all sin).

The missionary rejoiced with her in her newly-found joy, shook her most heartily by the hand, bid her stand fast in the Lord, and promised to call at the Home again on his first opportunity. The next day he called, and found this young convert and some of her companions rejoicing in Christ as their Saviour, and anxious to know more of the love of God.

Other happy meetings were held, and when the time came for their departure, the missionary accompanied them to the steamer, saw them comfortably settled in their berths, and then commended them in prayer to the God of all Grace, after which the shepherd and his flock parted, probably not to meet again until they are united with the Lord in glory.

OUR POLICEMEN.—The Christmas number of On and Off Duty (2d. Marshall Brothers) is an unusually attractive one, containing, besides several illustrations, a Christmas Carol with music, a large sheet almanack, with original picture, and much useful information. Miss Catherine Gurney, Hon. Sec. Christian Policemen's Association, 11, Ladbroke-terrace, W., writes:—"We are most anxious to have this paper put into the hands of every policeman in the country; friends could greatly further this object by ordering the number, and giving a copy to each man at some station not yet supplied."

THE LONDON CHURCH MISSION.

WE have received a number of reports, in addition to those given in our last issue. We have only space in this number for the following:—

ST. THOMAS, BETHNAL GREEN.

The missioners here were Rev. George Godsell, vicar of St. Andrew's, Plaistow, and Rev. Halsall Segar, vicar of South Hincksey, Oxford. The preaching was very earnest and practical, and the instructions which followed were very plain and definite. The congregations were very good throughout, and many who were present, and listened most attentively till past ten o'clock, had never been inside a church for years.

The Church of England Working Men's Society, which had announced at their meeting at King's College that they would work in this parish, failed at the last moment, and the Vicar had to arrange for the out-door preaching without them. Some of the workers of the parish came forward, and went with the clergy and one of the missioners to different points in the parish, where addresses were given to most attentive audiences.

Perhaps the most important part of the Mission work here was the personal dealing with the people, many of whom sought the help of the missioners.

ST. JAMES'S, CLAPTON.

In this parish the Mission has been, so far as human eye can see, a very great success. The Vicar, Rev. H. D. Pearson, and his many helpers, may well be thankful that their work was a good preparation for the influence of the missioners. Every service has been well attended. The Children's Service at 4.45 every day was crowded, 1000 children being present. Rev. W. E. Cleworth, a well-known conductor of such services, gave some admirable addresses.

The services for men, mothers, servants, and deaf and dumb, were most beneficial. These were conducted by Rev. G. R. Thornton, of St. Barnabas, Kensington.

ALL SAINTS', CLAPTON.

Canon Bullock and Rev. H. Morris were the missioners here. The addresses to men by the former, at the men's services, were most fervid and eloquent. Over 300 memorial cards were taken at the close of the Mission.

The vicar of this parish is the Rev. B. M. Kitson, and during his short incumbency over £10,000 has been spent in church extensions in the parish. The needs here are great and increasing.

ST. THOMAS'S CHURCH, ISLINGTON.

The Mission here was conducted by Rev. H. C. Sturdy, of Dorking. The services were all well attended, and very great blessing has resulted from them. Believers have been very materially helped and strengthened. The afternoon Bible Lectures were especially blessed to this end. There has also been a great ingathering of souls to the fold of Jesus. Some anxious souls remained behind at every evening service, and on each occasion some found peace. A cheering work has been going on among young men, several of whom have yielded their hearts to Jesus.

One of the most encouraging features of this Mission has been the work among the children. After the children's services, considerable numbers remained to the after meetings, some in great anxiety of soul. A little girl, after one of these services, waited outside the church, and exclaimed, "Oh, Mr. Sturdy, I do so want to love Jesus." Especial prayer had been offered for the children, and what we have seen is only, we hope, the beginning of a much more cheering work. Mr. Sturdy's addresses to the young people were beautifully simple and attractive.

Lady Hope held two very largely attended meetings for women in St. Thomas's Schoolrooms, and one very nearly as large for men on the Saturday evening. Much blessing resulted from these, and at the after meetings several were led to the Saviour.

HOLY TRINITY, STEPNEY.

In this parish, which is one of the largest in the East-end, great efforts were made to bring the Gospel to every creature, both by services in the church and in the mission buildings, of which there are three already at work. The services were adapted to the young, the mothers and daughters, the fathers and sons, and the general mass of the people, and were held at every hour nearly through the day, from early morning till about ten at night. Special work was also done in the workshops, among the fallen, and among the sons and daughters of Israel.

A really earnest and strong battle was fought against sin in every way, by the earnest preaching of the Gospel in a manly way, by the earnest talk to the people in their own homes, and by the distribution of tracts, of which some thousands were given away from door to door and in the street, and at the places where men do congregate. The work was quiet, but left a deep impression, and will be, like the bread cast upon the waters, found after many days.

Many of the West-end workers were surprised at the kindness and courtesy of the poor, and at the absence of anything approaching to open hostility among the people.

ST. PAUL'S, CANONBURY.

The deep interest felt here in the special effort was manifest in a variety of ways. It is not too much to say that not for very many years has St. Paul's Church witnessed such a revival of spiritual life, such crowded and hearty gatherings, such a spirit of unity among the members, and such earnestness of purpose.

The mission preacher was the Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke, whose exceedingly earnest and clear addresses made a deep impression on the large congregations. On the Wednesday evening of the Mission the preacher narrated the circumstances of a most sudden death, information of which had just been brought to him. On Monday night a young man attended the church, having been invited by another living in the neighbourhood. He had for a long time given way to habits of intemperance, and had often been warned that the drink was killing him. At the pressing invitation of his young friend, though at first he made light of it, he promised to come to the Mission. Being deeply impressed by what he heard, after returning home he continued in prayer pleading for forgiveness for his sins till 12 o'clock, and then, having (as he told his friends next morning) found peace, he went to bed. On awaking he became conscious he was dying, and having called his friends, told them so. Almost his last words were to send a message to the young man who had invited him to attend the Mission service, to the effect that it was through him he had been saved. He died in the course of the morning, having no doubt whatever of his salvation. It might be well said of him, he was a brand plucked from the burning.

The thanksgiving service was well fitted to call out the warmest feelings of hearts already attuned for praise.

SHOREDITCH PARISH CHURCH.

We had a full church every night, and the other seven or eight daily services were all fairly well attended. An address on "Vipers" on Sunday afternoon, to "men only," delivered by Rev. J. Cullin, one of the missioners, to a large audience of men, created a deep impression, and will be followed up by the formation of a society of men pledged, as God may help them, to a pure and godly life. The evils dealt with were gambling, intemperance, and impurity.

On two nights of the Mission week the parish was aroused by processions of the Church of England Working Men's Society, who, starting with a service in the church, marched through the streets now singing hymns, now stopping to address the crowds who gathered round them, and finally returning to the church for the 8.15 service, bringing with them a miscellaneous following gathered from far and near. A band of workers from Battersea on another evening did the like kind office for the parish; thus the evening congregations, never small, were materially increased, and on these evenings the large church was nearly full. Mr. Cullin's powerful addresses were listened to with the deepest attention, and many stayed till a late hour at the after-meetings for instruction and prayer. How many of the masses have in some way or other come within the influence of the Mission? In some cases we know they have been wonderfully brought into the light; there has been a great deal more work done of which we know nothing. But what we do see and know is, above all this, that the regular congregations, the church workers, have been touched and stirred, and are ready to see their duties more clearly and do them more thoroughly, ready for permanent missionary work, ready to go forth as "living epistles, known and read of all men." God grant that this Mission may be only the beginning of a grand series of missionary enterprises in East London!

ST GEORGE'S-IN-THE-EAST.

St. George's Church was not, strictly speaking, included in the general Mission in East London, as it had been determined, after much anxious deliberation, to defer the holding of a Mission in this parish. But not to be out of sympathy with the movement, special services were held throughout the week At the evening service, earnest and striking addresses were given by Rev. W. M. Sinclair, vicar of St. Stephen's, Westminster, and were attentively listened to by large congregations, many persons being evidently greatly moved by what they heard.

During the week, in many parts of East London, a great effort was made to rescue young girls who had fallen into sin. In this parish, where there is peculiar need for this work, such an effort formed a special feature of the Mission. The bad houses and the public-houses were all visited by the workers, the parish Mission-hall was thrown open during the week, and the young women were invited to tea every day. Earnest Gospel addresses were delivered on the several evenings by the Rector (Rev. C. H. Turner), Rev. F. J. Ponsonby, Rev. W. Panckridge, and other friends. The listeners were truly outcasts, but their conduct was almost always quiet and reverent. The new Mission-hall belonging to the Ratcliff-highway Refuge was used as a temporary dormitory, twenty-five extra beds being made up; the workers at the Refuge only too gladly gave their help. Girls are still coming to this Refuge, and although they are passed out of the neighbourhood as quickly as possible, from eight to ten of the extra beds are still nightly occupied by fresh cases, some of them saying "they could not rest after the words they heard last week." The workers in Ratcliff-highway feel that the Mission is but the beginning of work, and ask for prayer that those who stay to labour on may be strengthened to gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing may be lost.

CHRIST CHURCH, STEPNEY.

A very encouraging work was carried on in this poor parish of 8000 souls during the Mission. For several weeks previously, tracts had been left at every house by the district visitors and tract distributors. Special meetings for prayer had been held. When the time came for beginning the Mission, many non-church-goers were brought to the House of God, and regularly attended the services. The Mission preacher was Rev. John Cullen, Vicar of Radcliffe-on-Trent.

Services were held daily for men, women, and children, besides the usual Mission service at 8 p.m., and were all well attended. It was pleasing to see about 100 women, many with their babies in their arms, sitting listening most attentively to the Mission preacher, and equally gratifying to observe the children running to church of their own free will to take their part in daily worship. A Temperance sermon to men was preached on Saturday night by Rev. W. Laycock, Vicar of Hurdsfield.

Mr. Cullen's earnest and affectionate preaching was greatly blessed: first of all to believers; then to the undecided and lukewarm. As a result of the Mission, a Bible-class for women, and evangelistic services on Sundays, Mondays, and Tuesdays, will be held in the schoolroom. It was proposed to discontinue these meetings, but a strong feeling has been aroused in favour of carrying them on. A Bible-reading and Prayer Union and Communicants' Union have also been commenced.

CHRIST CHURCH, WATNEY-STREET, E.

The Mission here has been a great success in many respects. The missioner, Rev. W. S. Lach-Szyrma, came to his work with evident seriousness of purpose and spiritual power—a power making itself increasingly felt. A band of enthusiastic workers rallied around the Vicar, Rev. P. W. Jay, and the assistant clergy. Not content with house to house calls, the streets were paraded by these workers with singing and banners, by means of which the evening meetings were filled with the right sort of people for an East London Mission.

There were meetings for men only on Sunday afternoons, for women on other afternoons of the week, and for children on alternate evenings. In addition to about seven services daily, most laudable efforts were made at later hours by devoted West-end ladies and others to rescue our fallen sisters, unhappily abounding in these parts. At a special midnight meeting held in the church, from 12 o'clock to 3, as many as eighty such persons were gathered together, while five of their number we induced to place themselves under reformatory protection with good prospects of restoration to virtue and happiness.

Anxious to secure durable results from the Mission, it has been resolved to continue special services till Christmas.

On Wednesday evening last week, Rev. Mr. Rust, of St. Peter's, Regent-square, delivered a discourse from Ex. iii. 7, 8, dwelling in eloquent, striking, and pathetic strains on God's knowledge of the sorrows of the oppressed in relation to the Israelites in Egypt, the nations under the dominion of Satan at our Lord's incarnation, and the afflicted and sorrow-stricken in this great metropolis. This Mission service, preceded by an earlier one for children, as the outcome of the ten days' Mission, could not fail to further the good work now going on in this parish.

ST. AUGUSTINE, HAGGERSTON.

The missioners were the Revs. Mr. Ives, of Roath, Mr. Ommanney, of Sheffield, and Mr. De Romestin, of Freeland. Mr. Ommanney took the Bible-classes and children's services, his genial manner at once installing him as a favourite. Mr. De Romestin preached on Sunday mornings, and delivered the addresses at the early services. He also did very useful and difficult work amongst the rough girls who earn a precarious living by making match-boxes, for whom a small coffee-house has been recently opened, which is already overcrowded. Mr. Ives took the sermons and instructions at the Mission service proper. His preaching attracted large congregations every evening, who listened intently to his earnest exhortations on conversion, repentance, the nature of sin, the love of the Saviour, the joys of heaven, &c. His sermons were deeply spiritual, and his style clear and forcible.

Before and after the Mission service a band of earnest laymen went through the streets singing well-known hymns, and delivering short addresses inviting listeners to come into the church. The danger of a Mission is, of course, that people will simply come and sing hymns and listen to sermons, and vanish when the special evangelising effort comes to an end. To guard against this, every effort was made to bring individuals into personal contact with the workers, and not without success, some 200 people having been seen in this way. Mere numbers are of course no absolute test, but it is thought that sober and solid work has been done.

ST. GEORGE'S CHURCH, TUFNELL-PARK, N.

The Mission held here has been marked with much blessing, both among the unconverted and those already on the Lord's side. The Mission preacher was Rev. J. H. Shaw, Vicar of St. John's, Harborne, near Birmingham. Very many have given clear and intelligent testimony that his earnest labours in the parish have not been in vain. Five services were held each day of the Mission, one of these being an evangelistic address in an iron hall belonging to St. George's parish, and situated in the poorest part.

The morning addresses on "The Christian Life" were very specially valued, and were marked with much beauty and freshness of thought. Many have been enabled to realise their risen life with Christ, and many too are awakened to their responsibilities as members of his body. The two afternoon services were for women and for children; these two were largely attended every day, and opportunity was always given at the close for conversation with the clergy or lay workers, if any were feeling personally concerned about their souls' welfare.

A great many stayed to the evening after-meetings, and at their close there were always some still left in the church anxious to be personally spoken to. The Thanksgiving Service on Wednesday evening, November 26, was deeply solemn and interesting, and over 230 remained to partake of the Lord's Supper.

Since the Mission closed, the Vicar, Rev. Marmaduke Washington, has encouraged testimonies being given of blessing received. At a meeting for prayer and praise held in the church-room, on Monday, December 1, many, by letter or word of mouth, spoke of the great things which the Lord had done for them.

There is now a great demand for Christian men and women to teach the various classes that have been formed as a result of the Mission; any who can help in this matter are desired to apply to Mr. C. M. Westfield, 44, King William-street, E.C.

THE CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

OPEN-AIR WORK.

AN interesting and well-attended meeting of the members of this Society was held recently in the Memorial Hall, Bethnal Green, for the purpose of hearing the statements of the open-air preachers, during the past summer.

The Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, made the usual report, which was of a most satisfactory character. Twelve stations had been occupied, many of them in very prominent positions, others in some of the back and secluded districts, swarming with the lowest class of the "outcast." About 400 services had been held during the season, and the total estimated number of hearers was over 100,000. The audience had given close attention to the addresses; many had been deeply convinced of sin, and several conversions had been reported; many had signed the total abstinence pledge, including some confirmed drunkards, and many had been induced to attend places of worship.

After the report nearly twenty preachers, one after the other, testified to the good done, by the most convincing evidence it was possible to have. Many interesting and striking incidents were related as having occurred during the season. One worker added his own testimony that he had been converted at one of the stations a few years back, where he was now engaged as one of the workers. At one station the interest created had been so great, that a room for indoor services had been opened, with very great encouragement. At several stations, great cordiality had been secured amongst the different churches contiguous to the stations, who have united with the Christian Community in conducting the work.

A most interesting and profitable meeting was closed with the usual devotions, the Chairman adding some practical remarks, addressed to the workers, for improving themselves, and preparing during the winter for increased usefulness, if spared till another summer.

LONDON HOSPITAL.—Any old periodicals or books would be much valued and gratefully received by the patients of the London Hospital, Whitechapel, E.

GLASGOW UNITED EVANGELISTIC ASSOCIATION.

THE Report of the tenth year's work of this Society contains on its first page a capital drawing of the Evangelistic Hall situated in James Morrison-street; and beneath it is the following statement:—"About 1000 persons receive breakfast every Sabbath morning; 800 children receive dinner; 300 children get daily bread in the Refuges; 70 are cared for in the Home at Saltcoats; thousands are helped in many other ways, and the poor have the Gospel preached to them." These were among the last sentences ever penned by the late esteemed and valued Secretary, Rev. James Scott, who ere completing this report was called away to the better land, to the deep regret of all.

"The past year," says the report, "though not to be compared with the previous one, during which our American brethren were among us, was nevertheless above the average in fruitfulness. The direct evangelistic work has been prosecuted with vigour; the tent-meetings on the Green during the summer were very large, and also the Sabbath evening services in the Hall during winter."

The various district meetings report satisfactory progress. Those held in Cowcaddens Free Church at the beginning of the year were blessed to large numbers of the right class, the Rev. Wm. Ross testifying that 128 persons joined his church; many others have joined various churches. The leaflet workers have given away 210,000 leaflets in the streets; the Temperance workers have taken 4350 pledges; the number of 1030 poor children have been in various ways cared for; and a second Refuge has been secured for little waifs from the street, which is now comfortably filled by forty more children.

The report adds, that "the greatest obstacle to our work is strong drink, and we constantly meet with drunken men and women whose lives have been blighted and cursed by it. But we praise God for having saved some who came to the meetings drunkards, but are now seeking to lead others to the Saviour." The children's evangelistic meetings appear to have been blessed greatly. One writes: "As regards the quality of the teaching, the interest awakened, and the spiritual results achieved, we have seen nothing so satisfactory. In addition to the direct spiritual results, we have to notice that the Sabbath-school teachers and other religious workers of the congregations, have been drawn out into personal dealing with the young regarding the great matters of sin and salvation, and the effect on themselves in quickening and training has been most beneficial. Many of the parents, also, have been blessed. Converted children are the best missionaries in the homes of their own parents."

A lengthy and interesting account of Dr. Somerville's late Mission to Africa is introduced toward the close, but with this our readers are familiar. Toward all this good work constant help is needed, and will be thankfully received by the honorary treasurer, Mr. J. H. N. Graham, 57, Cathedral-street, Glasgow.

POEMS FOR THE PEOPLE.—Some time since we inserted a homely, but vigorously expressed, Temperance tale in verse, entitled "The Repentant Mother." It is now published in sheet form, as well as other poems by the same author. They are well worth distribution among those who are in danger of becoming victims to the drink curse, and may be had of Mr. E. Evans, 101, Cambridge-road, Kilburn, N.W., 2s. 6d. per 100, or 4d. per dozen.

FIELD-LANE REFUGES.—Owing to the great distress now prevailing, the applications for relief are most urgent and numerous, and unfortunately we cannot adequately meet them. Our operations are not confined to any creed, district, or nationality, want being the only qualification. The deserving poor never are refused assistance. Upwards of 2000 persons are benefited weekly. The Treasurer, Mr. Wilfrid A. Bevan, 54, Lombard-street, will thankfully receive help, or it may be forwarded to Mr. Peregrine Platt, Secretary, Vine-street, Clerkenwell-road, E.C.

AN EVENING WITH LONDON NOMADS.

THE dictionary definition of a Nomad is "one who leads a wandering life." In this mighty metropolis their name is legion. The greatness of London favours such a method of life. You may wander up and down its streets day after day, week after week, perhaps month after month, and yet scarcely be obliged to retrace your own footsteps. But wherever business or begging may take them during the day, these nomadic citizens gravitate at nightfall towards the common lodging-houses; that is, if they have secured the necessary coppers wherewith to pay for shelter and sleeping accommodation. If they cannot pay—well, they must wander on, night as well as day, and snatch such repose as they may, in such queer corners as they can. We have heard of some strange expedients that are resorted to by these wandering tribes of the city: but that is not the immediate subject in hand.

Like other haunts of the East-end poor, Spitalfields has its quota of nomads, who patronise the common lodging-house. Among these Miss Macpherson and her band of helpers find a ready field for Christian effort. What good service these devoted servants of God, and soldiers of Christ, have done in diffusing the savour of the Gospel among the Spitalfields slums, can only be known to the recording angel. But last week our ingenious friends made a new departure. They invited nearly 200 of these nomad lodgers to a supper party at the Home of Industry. And they came: boys, scarcely in their teens, most of them in premature middle life, some getting near the foot of the hill; black skins and white skins, or skins that should have been white, but were not. We fear that soap and water and towels are not too plentiful in the "places of abode" from which they came. Perhaps they think that an excess of one kind of skin covering makes up for the defect in another. At any rate they came, dirt and all, tatters and all. And they received a right royal welcome. We have seen many an interesting assembly in the upper room of 60, Commercial-street. We never saw one that interested us more than this.

What did they get for coming? First of all they got supper; and no trumpery menu it was, but something substantial, toothsome, and satisfying. Miss Macpherson "deals her bread to the hungry" in no niggard fashion.

What next? We must tell as briefly as we can. Miss Macpherson gave them a motto which we are fain to believe they will not forget in a hurry. The supper was almost over, and all were in good humour; so they were ready to receive her lesson in social economy. "Listen to me while I tell you something: 'Six gallons of beer have only as much nourishment in them as one penny loaf.' It has been tested and found to be correct. Will you remember that? Now, then, will you all repeat it after me. Who will stand up and say it alone?" Hands go up, and amid much serious merriment, several come forward, some to say it correctly, some to break down in the middle, and one, at least, to give a revised and improved edition, whether by accident or intent we wot not: "Six gallons of beer have no nourishment at all——" the rest of it drowned in laughter and applause. No, we do not think they will soon forget this economic axiom, especially after the very original and daring recipe that Miss Macpherson gave them, by which to remember it. But we will not reveal her secret.

What next—and best? A feast of Gospel song, with a stream of Gospel testimony and exhortation sandwiched in between. The singers and the preachers were some score or thereabouts of the "Stratford Mizpah Band." How the hearts of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey would have burned within them for joy if they could have been sitting where we were, and heard the thrilling songs they sang and the stories of salvation that some of these fine fellows had to tell. The first to speak was one who ten months ago was an infidel, a drunkard, and on the verge of destitution. He was induced by a working comrade to go to West Ham-lane Hall, "more to hear Mr. Sankey sing than anything else." The Lord met him, and the upshot of the matter was that on the evening that Mr. Moody preached to atheists—an evening we remember well—this young man was one who shouted "I will!" when the preacher asked who would give up the sandy foothold of the sceptic and step on to the Rock of Ages. After him came the comrade who invited him to the meetings, and who was converted some few years before, in answer to a mother's prayers. So, with intervals, the testimony flowed on, while the nomads looked and listened and cheered. One of the Band said he had been brought to the Lord through the instrumentality of Miss Murray, when he was in the Eye Hospital through an accident. The last witness of all was a white-haired man, who excited much interest as he described his struggles before he finally succeeded in giving up the drink, and how he surprised his wife one day when she discovered a drawerful of coppers,—so heavy he could hardly move it—representing the beer-money he had laid by. Then when Mr. Moody came to Stratford he, too, went to the hall, was wounded to the quick by Mr. Moody's sermon on "Sowing and Reaping," and was induced to give his heart to the Lord. There he is now, a venerable brother, singing for Jesus with the rest.

The Stratford Band are favoured with a good leader, and they sang out the Gospel songs with fine effect. The audience were not slow to show their appreciation of the music, and they could not help being touched in their hearts by the truths so sweetly conveyed to their ears. Mr. Boardman, of Stratford, one of the Secretaries of the late Mission there, came with the Band. He presided at this meeting with a skill that was beyond all praise; we do not think Mr. Moody himself could have done it much better. His little interludes, and his summing up at the close, were models of straight and deeply sympathetic Gospel pleadings with his brothers, for whose salvation he yearned and longed. The men themselves sang some hymns in such a way as to prove that they had had many previous lessons in the lodging-house, thanks to the tuition of Miss Macpherson's workers.

What the net outcome of this singular supper party will be it is not for us to say. Quite a number of them signed the pledge on the spot, and we are fain to believe that some pledged themselves also to receive into their heart of hearts the Gospel message they heard. They have many special difficulties, no doubt, but Miss Macpherson told them, with a plainness of speech that fairly startled them, that it was their abominable pride more than anything else that kept them from following Christ. Pride of rags and poverty! And yet we doubt not she was perfectly right. We left the upper room, convinced of two things: First, that there are not a few rough human gems to be found among these lodging-house nomads; and second, that disinterested kindness and practical sympathy, coupled with the faithful proclamation of Divine love, are equal to any emergency in the evangelisation of the masses. It only needs that these qualities be brought into play for God to give his abundant blessing.

CHISWICK MISSION HALL.—A tea and public meeting was recently held to celebrate the fourth anniversary of the evangelist. Over 100 partook of tea, and there was a large gathering at the meeting, which was presided over by Mr. D. Tweddle. Rev. Nevison Loraine, Vicar of Grove Park, gave an address full of seasonable advice to those who had commenced to live a new life. He said that in the new year their evangelist purposed devoting one day a week to similar work at Strand-on-the-Green, in connection with himself, and he asked their kind co-operation in this matter. Mr. Smith, the evangelist, gave some interesting particulars regarding the work. Mrs. Ginever also addressed the meeting, giving particulars of her work among the orphans, numbering now over 100. The Chairman, in bringing the meeting to a close, said that one branch of usefulness about to be started was a soup kitchen, which would, no doubt, prove a boon to many in distress at the present time through slackness of work.

THE GLORY OF YOUNG MEN.

AN address on "The Glory of Young Men" was given by Mr. S. A. Blackwood, Secretary to the Post-office, on December 2, at the house of Mr. George Williams, Russell-square, who had kindly invited a large number of young men to meet Mr. Blackwood. The meeting was opened with prayer by the Rev. F. F. Goe, Rector of St. George's, Bloomsbury.

Mr. Blackwood said he did not think that the words, "The glory of young men is their strength," were intended to apply only to spiritual strength. They referred also to bodily strength and to intellectual strength. Bodily strength is glorious. Many terms are now often misapplied; not so long ago to take another man's life was called "an affair of honour;" and the wretched woman who walks the streets has been called "a woman of pleasure." The man who has ruined her is called "a gay man," and his wickedness "an act of gallantry." But God is the Creator of the wonderful human body—which is, perhaps, unrivalled in its powers of endurance—and it is right to be proud of its strength. "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth."

There is, too, intellectual glory. Most men have some longing for fame. The glory of the intellect is far greater than the glory of the body. We need manual labour, but the poets and the philosophers, the physicians and the statesmen, are those who shape the world's history. We must be careful that we seek fame in a right direction, and in a right spirit. Look at the young men of the Bible—that revered Book which has stood unharmed all the attacks that have been levelled against it, and which will last to all eternity. Look at Joseph, taken away to a strange land when only seventeen, and exposed to great temptation. But he overcame temptation, and was he not rewarded, even in this life? Look at Moses, brought up in the luxury of Pharaoh's palace; he was "the servant of the Lord," and God buried him. He and one other were with Christ at the transfiguration, and his name is coupled with Christ's in the "Song of Moses and the Lamb." Is not that glory? Look at David, at Daniel, at the Apostles, at Paul, the greatest of Christian heroes; have they not glory?

It is an undoubted fact that the world does not take due account of the religion of a young man. It is often said that he is all very well, but that he is weak, or narrow-minded, and so on. But he need not be any of these. There is nothing more beautiful than a Christian young man. We are beset with trials. There is in London, surrounding us on all sides, a state of sin and crime like that which brought down destruction upon the cities of the Plain; a condition of things of which it is to be hoped many have no conception. How, then, are we to obtain spiritual glory? Only by being one with Christ. Of course it is a mystery, but is not our life a mystery? And God has promised that He will give us strength.

Then, how are we to preserve this spiritual strength? We must take plenty of nourishment. We must put aside the books that are hurtful or useless; we must diligently study the Bible, and we must "inwardly digest it." We must seek fresh air; the atmosphere we breathe must be as wholesome as possible. Our bodily strength requires for its continuance rest, and a visit to sea or mountain, that our lungs may be invigorated. It is the same if we wish to preserve our spiritual strength. We must take all the opportunities we have of communing with God. And we must take plenty of exercise. We ought to do something for Christ every day. It is impossible to tell what effect for good a word or a look may have at a critical moment.

Mr. Blackwood's address lasted about an hour, and was followed by prayer. Many of those present heartily thanked the speaker for the admirable words he had spoken, and Mr. Williams for his kind hospitality.

SOCIAL ISHMAELITES AT SUPPER.

IF good old Dr. Guthrie could have been present at Mr. George Hatton's Mission Hall in Little Wild-street on Tuesday evening last week, he would have found a text for a new volume on "The City: its Sins and Sorrows." He would have seen some 250 men and youths who by their very presence there admitted that they were enrolled in the criminal class. It may be possible that some stragglers declared themselves to be worse than they really were, for the sake of getting a good supper; but the probabilities are against it. Social "sinners" they therefore were; and certainly many of them looked "sorrowful" enough in their ragged attire, with their unwashed faces and unkempt hair. They appeared one and all to have proved by bitter personal experience that "the way of the transgressor is hard."

The object of those who invited them, however, was not so much to dwell on the past, black though that may have been, as to bring about a better and brighter future. This is the keynote of the great reformatory work carried on by Mr. Hatton and Mr. Wheatley among discharged prisoners; this was the pleasant keynote of the evening's proceedings last week.

Of course the claims of the body were first met by the substantial—almost sumptuous—supper that was spread for the guests. These guests showed their appreciation of this bountiful provision, in the most approved fashion. Then they filed into the hall—a melancholy-looking procession—and everybody settled down for the meeting, with Sir Ford North, one of the Judges of the Supreme Court, as President. He was supported right and left by many persons interested in the welfare of discharged male prisoners. Among them was Lord Mayor Nottage, who received a vociferous welcome, and who bids fair to follow closely in the footsteps of his philanthropic predecessor.

Mr. Hatton's statement of the year's work was the first item on the intellectual bill of fare. As usual, it was clear, manly, and hopeful. Over 16,000 men had been discharged from Government prisons during the past twelve months. Of these more than 12,000 had accepted the invitation of the Mission to breakfast; 4234 had signed the Temperance pledge; 3325 had been further assisted in various ways. To the colonies 100 odd had been sent, with the view of their making a fresh start in life; 291 were sent back to their friends; situations on land were procured for 253; 31 were sent to sea; while as many as 2647 were assisted with money, stock, tools, clothing, &c., in order to help them into some path of honest industry. These figures are easily told, but they seem to us to represent a tale of good work done, of which any society may feel glad and proud. Mr. Hatton paid a tribute of grateful praise to various police and prison officials, who had heartily seconded their efforts; and a great cheer went up from the audience when he remarked on the self-denying labours of his trusty secretary (Mr. Wheatley), whose success in securing situations for the men had been truly astounding. The climax was reached when Mr. Hatton, on behalf of some of the men whom Mr. Wheatley had thus befriended, presented him with a gold watch, as a token of their gratitude and good wishes.

It was now Mr. Wheatley's turn to speak; but he is more a man of actions than of talk. In a few words, more eloquent, however, than any well-rounded periods could have been, he thanked the donors for their gift, and then read some letters he had received from those who had been helped through the Mission. One letter was from a thankful mother, whose erring son had been befriended. Mr. Wheatley referred, in closing, to the remarkable fact, given to him by the foreman of large works, that out of one hundred men whom the Mission had sent there, only one had betrayed his trust, as far as could be ascertained. This gratifying statement bore good fruit, as will be seen a little later on in our report.

We have said that the keynote of the meeting was sympathy and cheer, rather than reproaches and rebukes. The learned Judge addressed his novel jury at some length, and administered a good deal of sound advice to them, but it was offered in a very kindly spirit, and received in the same way. He told them that temptation, or even the demands of hunger, was no excuse for launching into a course of crime. Since they had fallen from the paths of rectitude, they would find it by no means easy to rise again, especially in these times of commercial and industrial depression. Still, there are many willing to help them; and they must be willing to help themselves, as far as they could. His lordship was very emphatic in commending to his hearers the practice of total abstinence from intoxicants, and of thrift. He also urged them, in the hour of difficulty or temptation, to ask the help of God, without which they would surely relapse into evil ways.

For geniality, heart, and practical worth, the speech of the Lord Mayor was the speech of the evening. He began by suggesting a plan which he thought might do much towards securing the £1000 desired by the Mission for a much-needed enlargement of the premises in Brooke-street, Holborn. He was sure, he said, that if such a fact as that stated by Mr. Wheatley with respect to the hundred men employed by one firm were properly brought to the notice of the wealthy City Companies, they would be glad to contribute to the good work. Any influence he could personally use with one or two of these Companies would be gladly exercised in that direction. We have not come here, said his lordship, addressing the social Ishmaelites in front of him, in any patronising spirit; we have only come to give you a good push forward if we can. If we had had the same surroundings and temptations as you, probably we would not have stood the test. As an indication of the growing sympathy that exists between those in high position and their less fortunate neighbours, he said that the Lord Chancellor and Lord Salisbury had within the preceding twenty-four hours expressed to him their deep interest in this work of rescue and regeneration. His lordship concluded by reciting in really first-rate style some verses by Eliza Cook on the well-known story of King Robert Bruce and the spider; illustrating the importance in any good undertaking of not yielding to despair, but of persevering to the end. Probably long after they have forgotten the more didactic parts of the speeches, these tried and tempted brethren will remember the injunction so eloquently expressed by the Chief Magistrate to > "Try bravely again,

> And think of the Spider and King."

Before the assembly dispersed, Captain Harvey, Governor of Wormwood Scrubbs Prison, and a tried friend of the Mission, made a strong plea for extended public support in its operations. Sir Henry Holland, M.P., said he had long wished to know something of this work. He was much better pleased to be at the meeting than in the House of Commons. In that assembly there was too often much needless talk and little work; here there was no great pretension to talk, but there was plenty of real work done. That, we may add, will be the honest verdict of all who are acquainted with Mr. Hatton and Mr. Wheatley. These good men, indeed, seem to be wearing out their very lives in the endeavour to lift up their fallen brothers and put them on the straight road again. If they do not receive large and hearty help it will not be greatly to the credit of the British Christian public.

ORPHAN GIRLS AT WALTHAMSTOW.—A small pamphlet has been published by Mrs. Parsons telling of the progress of her Orphan Home. The Servants' Home has been reluctantly given up through insufficient support. Articles of clothing are solicited, suitable for the orphans. Applications for their services come in abundance, and for the most part a good report is given concerning them by the ladies into whose service they go. "To feed, clothe, teach, train, nurse, and love them is the aim of our institution, ever keeping to the front as our primary object the salvation of their souls." Mrs. Parsons' address is Cumberland House, Walthamstow, Essex.

BIBLE STUDENTS AT TEA.

ON Thursday last a social tea and meeting was held at Malden Hall, Haverstock-hill. The occasion was the annual gathering of members forming the Bible-reading class held on Sunday afternoons. Under the able conduct of Mr. Frederick Twinch the class has gradually increased, so that now no less than 100 men assemble regularly for the study of God's Word. As each member was supposed to invite two friends, there were about 300 gathered to tea; all appeared greatly to enjoy the opportunity afforded for mutual converse and social friendship.

At the meeting that followed, Mr. Twinch presided, and gave a brief address, showing the origin and gradual development of the class. His object was to establish the men in the truth, so that their spiritual life might be fed. But this was not the only work done; many unconverted ones had been awakened and saved.

The meeting was also addressed by Messrs. G. Huckleby and J. Ashton. Both the addresses were in harmony with the character of the audience, and, while deeply solemn and intensely practical, as to the message, were enlivened and illustrated by fact and anecdote, admirably fitted to arrest attention and awaken interest. Many earnest prayers were offered by converts, who told out their gratitude to God as only such men can. The members of the North West London Choir, led by Mr. Elgan, did good service by singing the Gospel.

HOMES FOR THE AGED POOR.

WINTER with its keen winds and hoar-frost is upon us. The young folk with warm blood coursing in their veins hail it with delight. The middle-aged welcome its return more soberly, but with no dread. To the aged it comes as an unwelcome visitor, likely to increase existing ills, perhaps to produce fresh ones, even where luxurious homes and easy circumstances lessen every evil that it brings. But age is not a privilege of the rich. In our great cities and our country villages many a toiler in life's battle-field reaches the fourscore years spoken of by the psalmist, and even adds an additional ten in the present generation.

For some such aged ones would we plead. In the Homes for the Aged Poor, at Anerley, we have at present 110 inmates. The largest portion of this number have already passed the threescore years and ten. A room, rent-free, is the boon conferred by the Charity, earnestly sought for, and thankfully received; but we wish some other grains of comfort to fall to the lot of our aged friends, and are at present anxious for the public to supply them with those "black diamonds" which can best allay their sufferings in the winter season, and make the dark days bright.

The incomes of the inmates, varying from 4s. to 6s. per week, are either derived from their own savings, supplied by former employers, or given from the small earnings of daughters in service, or sons struggling to support large families of their own. These little incomes, enough for their need in summer time, are insufficient to provide them with firing in the cold months. Are there not some who would enjoy their bright Yule logs and blazing hearths better if they felt they had provided some of these old folks with a cheery fire? Many of those in the Homes belong to the household of faith, and have thus a double claim on our care. For the others, special efforts are made to lead them to the Saviour, so that "light at eventide" may be their portion. Funds for supplying coal in the eight Homes, as well as for the general purposes of the Charity, will be thankfully received by the Hon. Sec., Miss S. A. Harrison, 5, Grand-acre-terrace, Anerley, S.E.

FOREIGN GOVERNESSES.—Miss M. Friedlander, of the French and German College, Saville-house, Denbigh-road, Pembridge-crescent, Bayswater, W., writes to the papers requesting holiday engagements for these ladies, most of whom are friendless and homeless in this great city.

Notes and Comments.

MANY workers among the London masses desire, as in former years, to give their poor neighbours a substantial meal on Christmas day, at the same time breaking to them the bread of life. We have not space for the insertion of the appeals which reach us, but we hope, through the thoughtful generosity of our readers, to assist the workers very materially in this praiseworthy effort. More than a hundred Missions need such help.

An excellent project has been started, to provide invalid kitchens situated in close proximity to hospitals, for the purpose of supplying out-patients with necessary food. It is often found by physicians that many of these applicants require food rather than medicine, and are absolutely without means to obtain it. One of these important adjuncts to hospital practice is already in course of arrangement near the Victoria Park Chest Hospital. An influential committee has been formed to carry out the idea. The plan is so philanthropic and practical that it is to be hoped the needed help will soon be forthcoming, so as to ensure speedy action on as wide a scale as may be found necessary. Miss Nicholson, 15, William-street, Albert-gate, S.W., is Hon. Sec.

We understand that 34 churches during the Mission now concluded in the North and East of London were supplied through the agency of the Church Parochial Aid Society, whose object it is to promote Missions throughout England. The Committee is prepared to give similar aid to incumbents during the coming Mission in the West-End of London in February.

We are glad to state that the Editor of The Pall Mall Gazette has opened a "George Smith Fund." We trust there will be a becoming response on the part of the community. No public man deserves better of his countrymen than this lifelong friend of the poor and downtrodden children.

The Free Presbytery of Aberdeen, last week, passed a resolution severely censuring balls and dancing parties, characterising them as promiscuous assemblies of people of both sexes for indulging in what was highly unbecoming a Christian profession and purpose. The Committee on Religion and Morals was instructed to take steps to put down all such practices, as unworthy of Church life. Betting and Sunday trawling were also strongly condemned. Outspoken speech and action are both required on the part of those who take the Lord's side on such matters; the lack of it threatens grave peril to the interests of truth and godliness.

The Daily News, in one of its leaders, sneeringly criticises the action of the Presbytery in this respect, referring to Rev. Mr. Bannatyne, the mover of the resolution, as the most moral member of the Committee on Morals, and expressing the hope that "Aberdonians all live up to Mr. Bannatyne's standard of holiness." Consecrated hearts will rejoice in every effort made within any of the churches to uplift the banner of "Holiness to the Lord," and to increase the separation between the Church and the world. In such a crusade it is not to be expected that secular journals or popular acclaim will enlist on its side.

The New York Independent announces that the Rev. Phillips Brooks, of New York, is to be the select preacher for the University of Cambridge, England, in June next. This is the second time that honour has been conferred on an American clergyman.

Lord Mayor Nottage has announced his intention not only to follow in his predecessor's footsteps as to Sunday observance, but to go beyond them. In reply to the Vicar of Cripplegate, who had asked him to attend his church on some Sunday morning, his lordship declares his intention not only to avoid State attendances at church on the Lord's Day, but also to abandon the practice of "State luncheons" on that day at the Mansion House. For the sake of the precept and example it furnishes, we append the following extract from the letter referred to: "I cannot see why a Lord Mayor, who is admittedly one of the hardest worked men in London, should be deprived of a day of rest, and I shall certainly secure it throughout my year of office, both for my servants and myself. I am glad, further, to think that a determination of this kind will set free on Sundays a number of others beside my own servants, to whom these observances used to entail enforced attendance and considerable work."

The attack upon M. Morin in the Palais de Justice, Paris, by Madame Clovis Hugues, wife of the Deputy for Marseilles, reveals a lack of moral sensibility, and the existence of popular sympathy with vengeance, savouring more of barbarism than civilisation. However reprehensible the conduct of M. Morin may have been, assassination cannot be a justifiable retribution. The fact that such an act could be spoken of by the public Press as noble and worthy of commendation, speaks volumes as to the spirit which is abroad. On this the Gazette des Tribunaux, a prominent legal journal, writes bitterly lamenting the degeneration of French manners, which it declares are rapidly tending towards barbarism. "Men's lives are taken for some real or imaginary wrong. Authority is no longer respected. Juries hesitate to perform their duties, and their weakness is a reflection on the moral condition of the nation. This is a sign of rapid decay."

We have received reports of the opening of the new premises of the Newcastle Y.M.C.A. on Friday last, and of an interesting Conference at Mildmay on "Unbelief, and how to meet it." We are obliged, through pressure on our space, to hold over these and other articles till our next issue.

It is proposed to connect the large and important island of Achill with the mainland of Ireland, by a swivel bridge across the Sound. The island contains 6,000 inhabitants, and is separated from the mainland by an arm of the sea only 310 feet wide at the point where the bridge is to be made. The cost will be £6,000, of which £3,550 has been raised, leaving a balance of £2,450. Well-known friends of Ireland have given their sanction and subscriptions to the proposed bridge. When this great undertaking is completed, it will add more than 35,000 acres to Ireland. It will raise 6,000 people from poverty by the development of their fisheries and other resources; and it will encourage tourists to visit this romantic island, with its marine cliffs, its grand mountains, and its many other rare attractions. The aid of all friends of Ireland is earnestly solicited. Mr. O'Connor Power, M.P., 5, King's Bench Walk, Temple, E.C., will receive subscriptions.

Mr. Spencer Walton, who has for over two years been working as lay missioner in the Church Parochial Mission Society, is leaving that society at Christmas. Among other reasons, he desires not to confine himself to one branch of Christ's Church, but to take up general and undenominational Mission work. We doubt not Mr. Walton will have the sympathy and prayers of our readers. Any communications concerning Mission and other work may be addressed to him at 4, Alderbrook-road, Clapham-common, S.W.

Among recent noteworthy events in Ireland is the resignation of his office by Archbishop Trench, after filling it with exemplary wisdom, diligence, and catholicity for a period of twenty-one years. Dr. Trench has gained high repute in Christian circles as an author, and as a devoted minister of the Gospel of Christ. His works on the miracles and parables of our Lord are standard volumes among all theologians, while his other varied contributions to the literature of our day are prized for their learning and practical value. The munificence of the retiring Archbishop in voluntarily surrendering the whole of the income derivable from the see, although legally entitled to hold it until his death, is in keeping with the well-known character of the man. He will be followed into his retirement by the esteem and best wishes of all by whom he is known.

The popularity of Lord Ripon among the natives of India, as a Viceroy, appears to be of unrivalled character. At a demonstration in Calcutta last week, over a hundred thousand people, together with five hundred of the principal Maharajahs, and other notables, assembled to bid him farewell on his retirement from office. In the viceregal procession thousands of students, with flags and banners, took part, while native bands played along the route, which was spanned with numerous triumphal arches, and strewn all along with flowers. Such a demonstration, it is said, was never before seen. The native Press also loudly sounds the praises of the retiring Viceroy, and says, if his successors follow his example, the loyalty of natives to England is ensured. As a mark of gratitude to an English ruler who showed sympathy with them, this is to be viewed with satisfaction.

We regret much to learn that in her excellent work among the poor children in the East-end, Mrs. Hilton has been caused much anxiety and expense through an outbreak of scarlatina in the Home at Feltham. Happily all the children have been spared. At this season of the year there are special and constant demands to be met in this work; we hope Mrs. Hilton's Crêche and Home, Stepney-causeway, E., will be remembered by many friends in the disposal of their Christmas offerings.

BOOKS FOR MEN IN LIGHTSHIPS.—Miss M. C. Turner, Denby Pottery, Derby, takes a special interest in providing good and interesting reading for the men engaged in the lightships on the Mersey, and those under the Liverpool Docks' Company. She says: "The crews sorely feel the want of books in their lonely lives. Those they have are read and re-read and remembered. If your readers have any suitable books to spare, would they kindly think of these poor fellows, and give me a little help in the effort to brighten their Christmas, and, above all, to send them a loving invitation from Him who knows so well the difficulties, trials, and dangers of seafaring men?"

SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

ON Friday evening, November 28, the Twenty-third Anniversary of the meeting for daily prayer held in the Lecture Hall (kindly lent by the Committee of the Sunday School Union) was held. The chair was taken by Mr. Brain, who said this was a gathering of the friends accustomed to meet for united prayer on behalf of London and its many workers in the shops and warehouses around. He hoped a free interchange of opinion would be given, and many proofs afforded of the spiritual good derived from meeting together day by day.

Interesting statements were then made—very encouraging to the friends who statedly attend. The attendance was about thirty to forty daily. This should be, and ought to be, considerably increased. It was earnestly requested that all present would make it known in the Sunday-schools, and in their various places of worship.

Mr. Jackson strongly urged more publicity, and recommended united action and co-operation with the leaders of the City prayer-meetings in general.

The daily meeting is held from 1 to 2 o'clock. All are welcome, if only for a short time.

THE FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

A FEW days ago we spent some time in listening to Mr. Edward W. Thomas, as he told of some of the more recent cases that had come under his notice at 200, Euston-road. One could not but hear with pain that there had been 1260 applications registered during the year, and some of those on whose behalf ministers and other friends wrote were not older than thirteen or fourteen years. The preventive cases of which we heard painfully illustrated the dangers that beset young girls who come to London from the country in answer to advertisements, or who, without knowing it for awhile, become the friends and companions of fallen girls of their own age in factories and workshops. The homes for the reception of the friendless of pure and unblemished character have proved a great boon to many of this class; they have been equally valuable to many young "servants out of place." It is the utter friendlessness and loneliness of many young women in a great city like ours that has again and again been found to be the reason of their going astray.

With regard to the rescue of the fallen, Mr. Thomas could, happily, tell of a good year's work. It was cheering to hear from one of his large experience that, notwithstanding the number of sad cases from time to time brought under his notice, he does not think that the evil fought against is greater than formerly. "We hear more of it," was his explanation, "because of the number of workers who are engaged in seeking and saving the lost." It would be hardly possible to conceive of sadder cases than some of those who were brought into the institution during the year. More than one was saved when at the period of despair they were contemplating suicide. In a great many cases, too, lost daughters had been restored to their homes, and to parents who had long sought them sorrowing, or had given them up either as dead or as irretrievably lost to them.

The Open All Night Refuge is of very great assistance, and during the year 670 poor wanderers have been received beneath its roof. It would seem, indeed, that in every department there has been very great activity and very fair success. It is to be hoped that the whole work will be liberally and prayerfully sustained.

CHESTERFIELD.—A successful Gospel Temperance Mission, extending over more than fourteen days, has recently been held in the town. The speaking at the whole of the meetings was exceptionally earnest and good, and the effect will not soon be forgotten. Mr. George Blaiklock, from Hoxton Hall, spoke at every meeting for a week, and proved himself a very intelligent and successful missionary. The programme also included a "Sunday-closing" meeting and a "local option" meeting. About 270 pledges and 500 blue ribbons were taken during the Mission.

Gleaners in the Harvest Field.

THE AUSTRALIAN BIBLE-CARRIAGE.

DEAR SIR,—Many readers of The Christian will have been interested in the account recently given of Mr. John Hambleton's voyage and the opening up of Bible-carriage work in Australia. By the last advices every Bible had gone: to use Mr. Hambleton's own words, "Swallowed up by the hungry crowd" around the diggings.

Bibles and Testaments, it appears, are sadly needed, and a fresh supply is about to be sent out from London. There must be many friends who would be pleased to know of this opportunity, and like to add a small parcel of Bibles or penny Testaments, which the Bible Society has offered to supply at special rates; a friend has offered to pay the freight. I am sure, with your usual kindness, you would be willing to take charge of any funds or parcels of Scriptures for the work. Faithfully yours,

10, Croxteth-road, Princes-park, Liverpool. Stephen J. Menzies.

SCHOOLS IN EGYPT.

DEAR SIR,—Those of your readers who take an interest in my sister's work in Egypt will be pleased to learn that since I came to join her here we have had additional proof that the good seed sown by her is "taking root downward, and bearing fruit upward."

One of her old pupils, a station-master on one of the railways in this neighbourhood, has opened of his own accord, and at his own risk, a small school, where his neighbours are glad to send their boys; it is nearly self-supporting. He devotes himself to this work without any remuneration, and has written to ask for copies of the Scriptures, and a suitable teacher to conduct it.

There are many other places where country schools (and town ones also) could be opened at no very heavy cost, but the funds of the Mission are just now so low that it is a matter of painful embarrassment to find means of meeting the absolute requirements without which the school here and the Medical Mission cannot go on.

Yours faithfully,

Cairo, Nov. 24. E Jane Whately.

REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND.

THE NOON PRAYER-MEETINGS.

DURING last week the noon-meeting at 186, Aldersgate-street, at the request of the Committee, was addressed each day by Rev. E. Payson Hammond. The attendance increased day by day to the close of the week.

The addresses on Prayer were most helpful and encouraging, and were spontaneously enforced by many touching records from the experience of those present. Miss Macpherson, who was generally there, on the first day prayed and praised with great fervency; five of her young relatives were saved during Mr. Hammond's former visit, and are now zealous workers for the Lord.

A young man said that he was converted through the instrumentality of Mr. Hammond at Greenwich sixteen years ago, with twelve other of his schoolmates; they are all now useful Christians, visiting lodging-houses, and doing other service for Christ.

DRAWING-ROOM MEETING.

A drawing-room meeting of representative ladies and gentlemen was held on Thursday last, by the invitation of Dr. and Mrs. Sinclair Paterson, to welcome and take counsel with Rev. E. Payson Hammond on his present visit to our shores, after an absence of sixteen years.

Dr. Paterson said his recollections of Mr. Hammond went back twenty-three years, when for weeks and months he had the joy of working with him for their common Master. He had known a thousand people in each of three or four churches waiting to hear a few words from Mr. Hammond, who drove from one to the other, and there was not a night when there were not souls saved. He was not so well known in England, but in America his work in the years since then had been attended with extraordinary blessing.

Mr. Cowan spoke of Mr. Hammond's visit to Scotland sixteen years ago. He was rather taken aback by his free and easy American style, but he found that many children were being converted; soon there was quite a revival, and many grown-up people were also saved. He noticed that those who entered into the work got a blessing themselves and in their families.

Mr. Gibbard Hughes said that sixteen years ago he was a little fellow, taken to Mr. Hammond's meeting at Mr. Baptist Noel's chapel. He went into the inquiry-room, and came out not quite sure whether he was saved or not. As he was going out Mr. Hammond, who stood at the door, stooped down and gave him a warm, fatherly kiss, and said, "Well, my dear little boy, do you love Jesus?" He was enabled by God's grace to reply that he did, and thus to confess Christ. With this confession came the assurance of his acceptance (see Rom. x. 10); and from that day he had been a Christian, and for years a worker among children, of whose salvation he gave some striking instances.

Mr. Bartlett, of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, said he had every reason to praise and bless God for Mr. Hammond. He had never attended meetings of such marvellous power before or since. The Tabernacle would seat 6000 adults, and there were from 7000 to 8000 children, and on some occasions 2000 or 3000 unable to get in. A young lady, his most efficient helper in his meeting of lads, was the fruit of Mr. Hammond's visit to London. Hundreds of thousands of children, not in England only, but in all parts of the world, were hearing and reading the Gospel through the Children's Special Service Mission, which was the outcome of Mr. Hammond's work.

Rev. C. B. Sawday had been with Mr. Hammond a great deal during his meetings at Mr. Baptist Noel's chapel, where he had talked night after night with the anxious ones. He had constantly seen him at Mr. Sands' house, and was assured that he was a man of one idea—the winning of souls, and that he diligently sought guidance and blessing from God in prayer.

Mr. Westall gave a most interesting account of Mr. Spiers taking his children from Islington to John-street Chapel, the conversion of many, the consultation of Mr. Spiers, Mr. Hughes, and himself as to keeping the children together, out of which grew the Children's Special Service Mission, which a year after was joined by Mr. Bishop, their able and active secretary; and of its marvellous growth and usefulness.

Mr. Morgan said: "Once a man twice a child." As he grew older he felt more and more interested in children. None of us, perhaps, fully realise that the work of Mr. Hammond has given such an initiation and impetus to the conversion of children, that during the past twenty years thousands and thousands of them have been brought to Jesus. One child, so far as service is concerned, is worth half a dozen adults. Not only on account of the years before him; if an old person is converted he very likely keeps it to himself, but if a child is saved he goes home and puts his arms round his father's and mother's neck, and asks, "Do you love Jesus?" or says, "Jesus loves you." A child's hand will go into a narrow place, where a man's can find no entry, and a child can reach hearts which those who are older cannot touch. There are thousands of children who if they had their rights would be in the fellowship of the Church; but if left out in the cold, they may go back, and their wise elders say, "I told you so. We ought to be very careful how we receive children." But had they been received and nursed, as the Lord's little ones, they would probably have been the most creditable and useful members in the Church. It is to be hoped that the faith of Christians in the conversion of children will be revived as the result of Mr. Hammond's visit, even though his ministry should be more largely addressed to adults than to the very young.

Mr. Hammond had been reminded by the various speakers of one circumstance after another, which he recounted in a way which touched the hearts of all present. Sixteen years ago, dear Dr. Andrew Bonar said on each night of the meetings to the audience, "If any of you have doubt as to this work being of God, I wish you would stop and talk with these people who are asking what they must do to be saved, and point them to Christ. At the end of the first week he said he had had a meeting of his elders, all of whom had done as he desired, and had all been assured the work was God's; and nearly all of them, as well as Dr. Bonar himself, had had members of their own families saved.

Mr. Bartlett's words had reminded him (Mr. Hammond) of the first great meeting of children at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. Before a word had been said he observed Mr. Sands moved to tears. When they got home at night he asked what had so affected him, and he replied it was the thought that that afternoon so many of that great audience would either accept or reject the Lord Jesus who had died for them. Now Mr. Sands was gone, and the Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel was gone, and he felt on reaching England as if he should have liked, if there had been another Oregon, to have straightway gone back again to America. But now he was cheered to hear so many friends speak of the blessing in the years gone by.

Mr. Hammond remarked upon the wondrous links in the providence of God. Years ago he was staying on the top of the Catskill mountains. A gentleman accosted him and asked him his way. They spent the morning together. He was one of the Editors of the New York Observer, and author of "The Power of Prayer," and was then compiling the sequel to it—"Five Years of Prayer." Mr. Hammond, at his request, contributed some incidents, which being read by Mr. Noel, led to his saying to Mr. Sands, "Why cannot we have answers to prayer like this?" and to the work which followed. How truly someone has said that we are treading on chords that will vibrate through eternity.

Robert M'Cowan asked me to go and see his mother in Cumnock. When there the minister asked me to preach. I said I was only a student, and couldn't preach. But he said, "You can talk." So we had a meeting and I talked. When I went back to Glasgow next day, I felt as if it had been something of a failure. Seven years after a young man called on him, who had been in the gallery, and got the impression that the speaker had a religion that made him happy, whereas he had only thought of religion as a gloomy thing. He wanted now to go to Canada, and asked for introductions. Shortly after news came of a great revival in Galt, through this young man, Douglas Russell.

Another of his reminiscences was of Brooklyn. After the first meeting the wife of the gentleman he was staying with remarked to her husband that she had not seen him speaking to any of the little ones who were anxious. He replied, No; he did not intend to: he did not believe in it. So it went on day after day, until one evening he was going up the aisle, and Mr. Hammond behind him. Two little girls were kneeling down, and one showing the other the way to Jesus, and telling her that she was in just the same difficulty herself on Sunday; but she had taken Jesus for her Saviour, and was at peace. The gentleman stood looking, then leaned down and listened, and the tears began to fall. "Oh, Mr. Hammond," he said, "this is my own little girl; and I have been doubting and standing aloof all the week! God forgive me!" "Yes, papa," said his child, "I was saved on Sunday, but I didn't like to tell you, because I heard you say you did not believe in it." "We all knelt down together," said Mr. Hammond, "and the rest of my stay at that house was much pleasanter than the first few days had been."

Mr. Hammond further explained that his work was by no means confined to children; he began with them, and that led on to meetings for adults. He concluded by saying that he had received invitations from various places, and asked the friends present to help him with their prayers.

Miss Macpherson cordially and, indeed, enthusiastically endorsed all that had been said, and spoke of her own happy experience among children.

Mr. R. Paton added a few words of hearty sympathy and counsel, and Mr. Hammond concluded a very delightful meeting with prayer.

BOURNEMOUTH.

The inability of the writer to fulfil an engagement on Sunday evening, in connection with the week's Blue-ribbon Mission at Bournemouth, led to his asking Mr. Hammond to take his place. In the morning, afternoon, and evening Mr. Hammond preached at Westbourne Chapel, and the power of touching the hearts of adults as well as children, by which he is so well remembered, was abundantly evident on these occasions. Many were in tears, and we do not doubt that the salvation of many souls will be the result of this day's service for the Lord Jesus.

Mr. Hammond has come to London to see his hymn-book and a few other books through the press, and to visit old friends. He will shortly commence his work, probably in Liverpool or Dublin. It will be remembered by those who knew his work three-and-twenty years ago, that Mr. Hammond introduced the kind of hymns into Scotland which have since been so much used and blessed. He has since written many hymns himself, and finds the use of his own book indispensable to the success of his meetings, in which there is a great deal of singing.

THE INDIGENT BLIND.—On a recent evening some two hundred and fifty poor blind persons, with their guides, were entertained to tea in the lecture room of the Archway Wesleyan Chapel, Upper Holloway. Addresses were given by Rev. J. Pearson, Rev. J. R. Wood, Mr. H. Bright, Rev. J. H. Shaw, and Dr. Armitage.

PUBLICANS AND BARMAIDS.—Friends of the Temperance cause might with advantage circulate at Christmas in the places where they live Miss Skinner's "Friendly Letter addressed to Licensed Victuallers," and one addressed to Barmaids (price ½d. each), published by Jarrold, London and Norwich. They were sent with Christmas cards to all the publicans in Bath last Christmas, and since then twenty-five of them have given up the business.

AN EARNEST WORKER IN BOHEMIA.

DEAR SIR,—I occasionally receive THE CHRISTIAN from Mrs. E. A. Robertson, of Hampstead, and though I can read English only a little, I read the paper with Christian interest, and feel myself in spiritual connection with the different servants of God of whom I read. When I see how in different places the Word of the Lord has free course and is glorified, I feel a deep desire to see the same more and more also here. Therefore, I ask you, dear brethren, pray for us here; pray for me, a feeble worker in the vineyard of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ here in Bohemia.

It was a wonderful and merciful guidance of the Lord that I came in connection with Mrs. Robertson, of Hampstead. It is now five years ago since I was asked to write somewhat about my evangelistic work here for a German Christian paper, Der Glaubensbote. Without my knowledge, a reader of that paper translated it into English, and it was published in THE CHRISTIAN. In this way the attention of Mrs. Robertson was directed to my work and to me, and from that time she sends me kindly every year a gift of £5, for the free distribution of the Holy Scriptures. This is for me an important help, when I can give to every poor man a copy of the Word of God. I have many opportunities of meeting such people, who possess not the Word of God. Many are not able to buy it, and when they receive it, they do read it with desire.

Yesterday my wife met a poor woman in Prague, and gave her a Bohemian tract (published by the Society for the Children's Services in London). After she had received the tract with much pleasure, my wife told her how good it would be if she had a Bible or a New Testament. She answered that she would like to possess one, but that she could not buy it for herself. Then my wife promised to give her freely a copy of the Word of God, and I will during this week give her one.

It is not long ago since my wife met a young sick Roman Catholic widow. She had just come from Vienna, where her husband had died. My wife gave her a New Testament, and invited her into a prayer-meeting for women and girls, which is conducted twice a week. She came once, but soon after that she was obliged to go into a hospital in Prague, because her sickness had increased. There, in the hospital, she read diligently in the New Testament. My wife visited her occasionally, and it was a joyful experience with her; she soon found forgiveness and peace through the blood of Jesus Christ, and she had then much desire to be with her Lord and Saviour.

It was an opportunity for my wife to meet other sick persons in the hospital. Once when she was there, and had read from the New Testament to the sick and believing wife, another sick wife said, "Please read loud that I can also hear somewhat of it." The passage was Luke xv. 11-24, and she had heard this story with great desire. She had such a desire after the Word of God that my wife gave her a New Testament, and she read in it with blessing. Both these women died within a few days of each other, and we could see in them both the fulfilment of the promise (Isa. lv., 10, 11): "For as the rain cometh down, and the snow, from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater, so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto Me void; but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it."

When I preach in a meeting I feel it is most important to make it plain that Christ is present, and that He is ready to write in the Book of Life the names of those who will be his. I fear lest the people may remain in such a condition as only to know this or that about the Gospel, and yet not to belong to Jesus. In this way a few souls came to the Lord, and they are connected as a congregation of Christians. According to the grace of God, and to their wish, I am their preacher. I can say that I experience much love from these my hearers and members. I have not a salary, but my members provide enough for me and for my family. What is more important they help me to bring souls to Christ as much as they can. So I can say that though I am poor, and my congregation is not rich, yet my position is a happy one. If the Lord should give me more means I could very easily and with a little help enlarge my work, not only in Prague, but also in the country. This is my prayer; please pray with me in this thing.

Dr. Bædeker, who is now in Odessa, in Russia, knows me and also my congregation; he has promised to come to us in December. As it is so blessed that through THE CHRISTIAN the attention of Mrs. Robertson was directed to my work, so would it be blessed if other friends should reach their hands out, and help us in the work of our dear Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

With best wishes of blessing in your work, I remain, yours truly,

(Rev.) HENRY MOWOTNY.

CHILDREN'S SERVICES IN NEWPORT.

THE fortnight of special services for children and young people is over. Mr. Spiers has left, but the results remain. Many children are rejoicing in the knowledge of sins forgiven; many teachers are made glad by scholars led to Jesus; and parents are rejoicing over their children—for one pleasant feature of this work is that when the first meeting is concluded, and the Christians present speak to the thoughtful children who have remained, parents, teachers, friends, can speak to their own children, and have the gladness of leading them to the Saviour.

Mr. Spiers insists on silence and attention. Any deviation from this at first caused him to stop in the middle of anything he was saying. Soon the young people knew this, and so still, so quiet, were they while Mr. Spiers was telling of Jesus and his love, that a child sitting in the front row imagined that all behind were "fast asleep." But attention was not tried too long. The addresses were interspersed with bright hymns, with whispered refrains. Occasionally the portfolios were held aloft and admired.

Perhaps to this stillness may be somewhat attributed the real success of these meetings. Many found Christ during the meeting, some on their return to their homes. A little girl said, "Oh, dada, I did want to stay, but brother would not stay, so I had to come home."

"Why did you wish to stay?"

"Mr. Spiers said Jesus wanted us to trust Him, and I should have liked to remain because I wanted to be saved to-night." "But Jesus is here, darling, and as ready to save you here as in the meeting." An hour later that child was rejoicing in sins forgiven, glad in the love of her Saviour. Who can tell the joy that filled the father's heart?

SHOREDITCH AND BETHNAL GREEN.—A good work is being carried on in these districts by the House to House Visiting Society, formed in June, 1833, in connection with Shoreditch Tabernacle. About 1200 families are visited every Lord's-day. Our forty-five visitors thus get many opportunities of speaking a word in season for the Master. They find with few exceptions that the poor and needy are willing and anxious to hear the Gospel, and in many instances to attend the services. Our books get much worn, and constantly need replenishing. The Committee would welcome help in money (as pecuniary relief is given to deserving cases of illness, death, or great want), and especially for left-off clothes, boots, &c.

SUNSHINE AND SHADOW.

BY REV. J. G. SMALL.

Author of "I've found a Friend, oh such a Friend!" &c.

WHEN the glad sun is shining brightly o'er us,
Bathed in his light the rugged mountain gleams;
Each crag and cliff stands out transformed before us
From sternness into beauty by his beams.

But when that sun, at eventide declining,
Behind the hill he had illumed, goes down,
The towering heights that intercept his shining
Themselves are blackened by the wrathful frown.

So when the Lord, our light, and our salvation,
Sheds on our souls the radiance of his face,
Sorrow and sickness, trouble and privation,
Take in the lustre of his glorious grace.

Ev'n death itself is of its gloom divested
When on it shines the sun of righteousness:
We welcome the great herald, once detested,
And what was once a curse now comes to bless.

But if such threatening ills our prospect bounding,
Reflect not, but shut out, the light of heaven,
Ev'n from the glory still God's throne surrounding,
No ray of hope shall to our souls be given.

For while God's grace revives the meek and humble,
The proud and perverse—they who hate the light—
On the dark mountains fatally shall stumble,
Amid the deepening gloom of endless night.

FROM THE NILE VALLEY.

A FRIEND in Cairo sends to us a letter, received from an English non-commissioned officer with the relieving force in Egypt, dated Kench, on the Nile, Nov. 18. Some extracts will be gratifying to our readers, as showing how some of these British soldiers are seeking to testify for Christ among their comrades in arms:—

"DEAR MRS. B——,—We often think and talk of you, knowing that you remember us in your prayers. We have had some happy times since we started, and we have felt that God has been with us. We had a meeting on shore on the night of the 13th. Before we had finished singing the first hymn we had quite a small crowd around us. Although there was a laugh at first, it soon subsided. As it was dark we could not read, so we prayed, sung, and spoke. It was a splendid meeting, and each of us felt that God was really with us in our feeble endeavour to do something for Him. We often meet on board the barge, and read aloud out of the Bible. We have not had anything like what I could call persecution.

"On the 15th we stopped at a place called Sohag, and we saw some young Arabs who professed to be Christians. Upon questioning them, we found them to be Christians indeed, and brothers in Christ Jesus. Amidst a crowd of soldiers, we got them to read out of the Bible, and also sing one or two hymns. We got leave from the Colonel to go into the village, from 5 p.m. to 8 p.m., and we had a meeting in their schoolroom—a glorious little meeting it was. Two of the Arabs understood English fairly well, so we got them to interpret the words which were spoken to the others. It was quite a pleasant surprise to meet with them, and to know that it is the work of the American Mission. It is a Dr. Hogg who is working there but we did not see him, as he had gone to some place up the Nile. It made one quite happy to hear those Arabs speak of Jesus as their Redeemer, and heaven as their home. May God bless such a work, wherever it is carried on.

"We have some real happy times on these barges, in reading the Word of God and commenting upon it. Of a truth we can say that Jesus is very precious to us that believe.

"Your brother in Christ Jesus, F. F."

MR. W. FORBES gave two Gospel Temperance addresses in Newcastle-on-Tyne last week. He is now in Edinburgh, and on Sunday next begins a Mission in Stirling.

WORKERS IN NEW YORK.

By SAMUEL HOPKINS HADLEY.

THE BOWERY MISSION.

AN occasion of much interest to many Christian workers in the city of New York was the recent fourth anniversary of the Bowery Mission. The Bowery is a wide thoroughfare over one mile in length. Four lines of horse cars traverse its entire length, and two lines of elevated railroad thunder by third-story windows, with from one to two minutes' headway. The street is lined with saloons, dime museums, dance halls, and dives of every description. Small tradesmen, mock auctions, cheap clothing stores, and lodging houses make up the sum total of its business population. Fakirs line the side walk, and on its wide pavement pours a ceaseless throng of the most cosmopolitan crowd that ever assembled in the new world. Every nation, kindred, and tongue pass through the Bowery. Every drunkard, every fallen woman, every "crook" in the city, find their way to the Bowery. All day and all night this ceaseless mass of souls move along to their ruin.

More than four years ago a few godly men met in a vacant room which they had rented, and, kneeling down on the floor in God's name, they started what has since been known far and near as the Bowery Mission. One of their number advanced the money to fit it up and the work began. Since then they have taken the whole house, and use the upper part of the building for young men. The place is fitted up in splendid style, with comfortable rooms and beds, also a reading room with a small but select library. They have a resident missionary, who devotes the whole of his time to the work, and in the four years the doors have been opened every night.

The Mission-room is large, bright, and cheery, and is located on the street floor. As soon as the sound of the glorious Gospel hymns begin, the doors are thrown open, and as the melody rolls out in the street the crowd pours in. After a half-hour spent in singing, the Scriptures are read, and then a chance is given for those who have found Jesus to testify to God's power to save from ruin, and stealing, and every other sin. The work is supported by voluntary contributions, and the rental of its rooms, while its affairs are looked after by a committee of heavy business men. The work is unsectarian in its character.

At the anniversary no one who loved the Lord could help exclaiming, "What hath God wrought?" Among those to testify were men who had been of all grades in criminal life. Ex-convicts, while going idly by, had been attracted by the singing, and when once in, the arrow of conviction went home to their souls, and they knelt down and cried for mercy, and found pardon before leaving the room. The writer heard one splendid-looking young man testify who had served two terms in prison; and on the day he was liberated he wandered into this Mission, and gave his heart to Christ. This was three years ago. Now he is superintendent of one of the most beautiful Missions in the city. At the gathering last Sabbath the house was packed with converts, and men and women noted for Christian work in New York.

Fanny Crosby, the blind poetess, was a very conspicuous figure on the platform, and composed two hymns for the occasion. After one of the most soul-stirring testimony meetings we ever attended, the invitation was given, and some two-score souls came forward in the inquiry-room adjoining, and asked to be shown the way of life.

THE JERRY McAULEY MISSION.

Sabbath, November 17, was a notable day in the Old Fourth Ward of this city. Twelve years ago the late Jerry McAuley started the first independent Mission work in New York, which has since assumed such immense proportions. Three years ago Jerry opened another work up town in 32nd Street, and a convert was chosen to fill his place named John O'Neil. His health failing, the present superintendent, Mr. J. F. Shorey, was chosen.

When some eight years ago Messrs. Moody and Sankey held their memorable meetings in the Hippodrome in this city, Mr. Shorey, who was about fifty years of age, and had been for some time a slave to the drink, wandered in there, more to get warm than anything else. Mr. Sankey sang "What shall the harvest be?" and Mr. Moody preached God's love even for the drunkard. A brother, who had been redeemed from a drunkard's life, came and grasped his hand, and told him how glad he was to see him. The Spirit of God convicted him of sin, and he there and then sought and found peace in believing on the Lord Jesus. From that time till now Mr. Shorey has gone steadily onward and upward, and has been one of the most reliable workers in the Gospel Temperance field. A year and a half ago he was called by the trustees of the Water-street or McAuley Mission to take charge of its interests, assisted by a consecrated missionary lady, Mrs. Sherwood. He has held aloft the banner of the Saviour down in that dark region day and night.

But I must hasten to describe the twelfth anniversary. The Mission is located near the water front, and over a hundred feet above it hangs the majestic bridge which spans the East River, thus uniting New York and Brooklyn.

Long before the hour for the services to begin, the beautiful room was crowded with one of the most distinguished audiences which it has been our privilege to see. Silks and furs mingled freely with cotton worsted, and men who were known all over the financial world shook hands with the "horny-handed son of toil," who had found his birth-place at that Mission.

The meeting was opened by Mr. R. Fulton Cutting, who aided Mr. Shorey in conducting the service. The meeting was also addressed by Messrs. Morris K. Jessup, John Crosby Brown, Rev. Dr. Day, and Rev. Dr. Lindsy Parker. After this followed testimonies from converts; these embraced all ages, creeds and nations. There were the boy not yet out of his teens and the tough old sailor of 73, who had heard Mr. Shorey tell of God's wonderful salvation, and knelt at the Mercy-seat. To recount all these testimonies would nearly fill your paper, so I will merely say the meeting was one glorious ascription of praise to God, and the liberal collection that followed from rich and poor showed how strongly this is intrenched in the hearts of the people.

Mr. Shorey is very successful in holding men, and he has already become a power in the work of saving drunkards. A short time since he was left a fortune of upwards of $100,000, but it is all the same. He still tells with wonderful power how the dear Saviour picked him out of the gutter a poor, homeless, hopeless, drunkard. He has the prayers and aid of the best people in this city, and the Lord is richly blessing his labours in Water-street.

TIPPLING.—The Lancet says that if casual social drinking, tippling, public-house drinking, and other careless social uses of alcohol were abolished, nine-tenths of the disease which now desolates family life would be cut off.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—A conference of delegates from Young Men's Christian Associations and others interested in religious work among young men in Reading and neighbouring towns, took place in the Abbey Hall, Reading, on Tuesday week. The afternoon meeting was opened uner the presidency of Mr. Martin Hope Sutton, whose place was afterwards taken by Mr. R. Y. Bazett. There was a good attendance, representatives being present from Reading, Oxford, Henley, Maidenhead, Windsor, Slough, High Wycombe, Marlow, Aylesbury, Guildford, Aldershot, Wokingham, Basingstoke, Newbury, Marlborough, Hungerford, Abbingdon, Wallingford, and Swindon. The principal object of the gathering was to bring the members of Young Men's Associations already in existence, or about to be formed in Reading and the surrounding towns, into closer sympathy, and to render them mutually helpful in Christian work by the formation of a District Union. The programme included the reading and discussion of papers bearing on the subject in hand. An evening meeting was also held, presided over by Mr. George Williams.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Stratford, E.—During the summer months there has been an Open-air Mission carried on by a band of working men in Stratford. They still hold an open-air meeting each Sunday morning. They have taken a building for their meetings to be held each Sunday and Monday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wiggan have held a fourteen days' Gospel Mission Services in Chestergate Chapel, Stockport. The Society in connection therewith has been greatly blessed of God. During their visit to Stockport over thirty persons professed to find the Saviour.

Cornelius Smith, "converted gipsy" (of Cobbold-road, Leytonstone, Essex), with his wife, has been holding some successful Gospel services at Hanley, where his son, Gipsy Smith, labours. Any friends wishing to invite Mr. and Mrs. Smith for evangelistic work may communicate with them at the foregoing address.

Hawick, N.B.—The Hawick Home Mission has lately erected a large hall capable of accommodating over 1000 people, with a lesser hall to seat over 150. It was opened in November with a soirée and conference. Mr. W Dunn afterwards held a series of evangelistic services, which were continued until November 30. His addresses were listened to with the deepest interest throughout, and a large number have professed to decide for Christ. Mr. Dunn was helped by a number of the ministers of the town.

Dockhead, S.E.—On Sunday, November 30, the Gedling-street Mission was re-opened for services, after renovation. This place, three years ago, was a stable, but by repeated improvement it is now a comfortable and convenient Mission-room. We have now 200 of the poorest children, and carry on eighteen meetings per week for adults and children. We want, if we can, to provide dinners for the poor during the cold weather.—Thomas W. Fowler, City Missionary, Gelding-street Mission Hall, Dockhead, Bermondsey, S.E.

Mr. Thomas Houston, the blind evangelist of Bessbrook, Ireland, has visited Luton for the second time this year, and held a series of meetings at the public baths, which have been times of great spiritual awakening. The last meeting was held in a small Mission-room on Monday, the 24th ult.; it was for those who had experienced blessing on the occasion of Mr. Houston's previous visit, nine months ago, and during the present Mission, and also for those anxious about their souls. A few testified to the blessing they had received, and a considerable number signified, by rising, their acceptance of the Saviour.

Lafford, North Devon.—In connection with the Temperance Society, Mr. Mark Rutley, of Cullompton, conducted a Mission in this village from 22nd to 24th November. On Sunday, after special sermons upon Temperance had been preached in the Church and Congregational Chapel, Mr. Rutley held a short service in the open-air, at which the rector, Rev. C. W. Wilson, assisted. In the evening a band of workers, with the Rector and Congregational Minister, sang through the village to the schoolroom. The preaching of Mr. Rutley was most direct and incisive, and there was such an evident working of God the Holy Spirit, that much blessing is prayed for and expected.

Bawdsey and Alderton.—A very successful Mission opened here by the Hon. Hamilton Tollemache on Saturday and Sunday, November 8 and 9, and carried on by Mr. F. Monk, of the Evangelisation Society, terminated on Sunday, November 30. The services were held generally in the Alderton Congregational Chapel, which is capable of holding 500 people or more. It was most refreshing to see how the poor people, and many who had not been in the habit of attending any place of worship, came up night after night to hear the Gospel. Christians of all denominations united heartily in giving life to the work. Three-quarters of the congregation, on an average, remained for the after-meetings, which were very helpful. The Mission was first arranged to last for one week, but the poor people were so anxious to have the service continued, that it was kept on for more than three weeks. There is every reason to be most thankful to God for bringing such numbers to hear his word, and for the blessings that have followed.

LORD SHAFTESBURY.—The following paragraph appeared in the morning papers of Monday:—"The Central News regrets to learn that Lord Shaftesbury was much worse last evening, and that, considering the great age of the venerable Earl, his condition is such as to cause some apprehension to his family and friends."

TROUBLES IN MEXICO.

DEAR SIR,—More blood has been shed in Mexico for the Name of Jesus, and this time the blow has come very near to us. My father-in-law, Nicanor Gomez, has fallen under the knives of Catholic assassins. As I am unable just now to print the sad story on our Mission Press, may I beg of you the favour to give this letter a corner in THE CHRISTIAN, in order that it may meet the eye of our friends, to whom I hope to send further particulars when I have leisure to issue another number of Mexico.

In the town of Almoloya del Rio, in the valley of Toluca, my wife's father, Nicanor Gomez, had sown the Gospel seed, and several converts were the result. On October 26 last they intended to establish public worship, and having given the usual notice to the authorities, Don Nicanor, with three of his sons, a preacher from Mexico City belonging to the American Presbyterian Mission, other brethren from Capulhuac, and the Almoloya converts, called on the municipal alcalde of that town, asking for protection.

That worthy declined to perform his duty, and went away to mass, leaving the Protestants standing in the law-court, undecided what to do. Fearing that without protection from the authorities mischief might ensue, they resolved not to begin the service, and were moving towards their horses in order to leave the town, when the alcalde issued from the church at the head of a furious mob, which at once launched like an avalanche upon the little group of believers. Don Nicanor was in the act of mounting his horse, but seeing the Mexican preacher in danger he ran to his assistance, and defended him from the furious mob, whilst he mounted and galloped off, leaving the noble-hearted Indian to fall under the blows of the bloodthirsty Catholics. One of his sons, Nestor Gomez, the only one of the brave man's boys who gained the saddle, rode to his father's assistance, but seeing him on the ground, and to all appearance dead, was riding away when he saw a crowd of Catholics like savage dogs struggling with someone. Brave Nestor plunged his horse through the mob, emptied the six chambers of his pistol, and found it was one of his own brothers they were assaulting. To mount the boy behind him on the horse, and struggle out of that raging whirlpool of devils, was a task the hero accomplished, but he brought away a terrible sword-cut over the forehead, and many a bruise from the stones hurled at him.

I must leave further details for another occasion. The good Lord alone kept Don Nicanor from being altogether murdered there and then. His poor wife raised him from the streets, watched over and shielded him for hours, until help came. He died at his home in Capulhuac the Sunday following.

We received news of the affair on Saturday, November 2, here at San Telmo. I saw it was necessary to take my wife to see her wounded father and brothers, but we were in a corner. Not a penny was available. How to obtain a few shillings wherewith to travel, and how to arrange for the protection of my children in my absence, was just then a problem of no little anxiety. The Lord opened a way in our extremity.

On Monday, the 3rd, we started for Toluca: reached there next day, to hear that my wife's father was dead, and was being interred that same day. On Wednesday we rode to Capulhuac. I gathered details from the wounded, of whom some will probably die; preached that night to the congregation and family so cruelly deprived of their pastor and head. Next day I returned to Toluca, leaving my poor wife with her widowed mother for a few days. In Toluca I wrote out the details of the crime, got up steam, and printed off several thousand copies, to be sent to all parts of the Republic. I also wrote to the President of the Republic, because the local authorities are acting shamefully. Not a single step has been taken to punish the criminals, but one poor Protestant who sent a telephonic message of the trouble from an adjoining town to the nearest Prefect, was put in prison, and kept there "incommunicated," for seven days.

Anxious to be back with my family, I should have left Toluca on Friday, November 7, but was penniless, and wasted all that day hoping to receive a letter and a remittance from England. None came, although overdue; but a kind "raven" lent me a few dollars, and I got on the road again, and reached here on Sunday last.

Nicanor Gomez was an Aztec Indian of pure blood: a brave, noble-hearted Mexican, whose life and work for the Master I purpose writing. He was indeed "faithful unto death," not only unto the Lord, in whose service he gave his life, but even unto men whose ingratitude could not swerve him an inch from what he thought was his duty. Eleven years ago his little flock in Capulhuac were almost exterminated by the Catholic wolves. I rode over to help them in that terrible trial, and helped them to stand firm. Mr. Hutchinson, superintendent of the American Presbyterian Mission, convinced that Nicanor Gomez was one of the King's own men, begged to assist him with a small stipend; not to buy him, nor to make a Presbyterian of him, but purely for the Master's sake. Years passed, a new superintendent came—"a new king, who knew not Joseph." Nicanor Gomez was at first treated with kindness, his son Nestor put as preacher in a new field, where he built up a congregation of several hundreds.

But both father and son refusing to be ordained, as they esteemed the Spirit's ordination as the best, and resisting frequent offers of larger allowances if they would become sectarians, both were treated with contempt and slight, even to being ordered to refrain from baptizing or celebrating the Lord's Supper. A few months ago the son, Nestor Gomez, was turned out of the Mission, although he was probably one of the best workers that Mission ever had. Nicanor Gomez, the father, daily expected the same ungrateful treatment, but "faithful unto death," he bore all in silence, unswerved by bribes or by slights from the contract he made eleven years ago; and his life was sacrificed in saving an ordained minister of that same Mission from which he received such insults.

He has left a family of eleven children. His eldest child is my wife. His eldest son is our preacher in Toluca, and is married. Nestor Gomez is also married. Should the Lord restore him from his wounds, it is my intention to let him take his martyred father's place over the Capulhuac congregation. Being an "outcast" from the Presbyterian Mission, he will receive no salary from them. But he is one of the few in Sardis whom the Lord counts worthy to walk with Him, and I earnestly hope God's people in England will generously send me some substantial help for this bereaved family and flock.

There are still eight unmarried children, with their widowed mother. Up to the day I saw them in Capulhuac, twelve days after Nicanor received his death wounds, not a line or word of sympathy or condolence had the family received from the Mission heads in Mexico, one day's journey only from Capulhuac.

Will not English Christians give these bereaved Mexican brethren some token of hearty sympathy in their labours and sufferings for the name of Jesus? Yours very faithfully,

San Telmo, Ixtapan del Oro, JAMES PASCOE.
Estado de Mexico, Nov. 11.

MISSIONARIES' HOME AT PLYMOUTH.—An Occasional Paper, issued by Mrs. Chapman, deeply regrets the necessity which has arisen for closing this Home. It also appeals to the Christian public for a sum of £60 to clear off the outstanding debts. Lack of funds, it appears, has been the hindrance to the greater success of this laudable effort. It is, however, encouraging to read that "since our Home was started, two other similar institutions have been opened, springing as it were out of ours, and to these I wish every success." Toward the sum needed two friends have promised £5 each; and further help will be gratefully received by Mrs. E. M. A. Chapman, 11, Radnor-place, Plymouth.

MISSION SERVICES AT OPENSHAW.

A SERIES of Mission Services has been held at Lees-street Congregational Church, during the three weeks ending Sunday, Nov. 30. Under God's favour they have been the means of winning many souls to Christ. The services were opened on Saturday, November 8, by Mr. James N. Carr, of Carlisle, who preached each evening, till the Wednesday following. The services from that time were conducted by Mr. Wm. Hall, evangelist, of Annan. The Gospel was preached by both these servants of God, with great power, and not the least part of the work was the great blessing received by the Christians.

More than a hundred persons have professed to take Jesus as their Lord and Saviour. Of this number, many show by their lives how real to them the change is. Some trace their conversion directly to the reading of the Gospel books which have been distributed liberally over the neighbourhood through the kindness of Mr. Carr. Others have been under deep impression for some time, and have by these services been brought to a point of decision. Others have been aroused from absolute indifference to a knowledge of their condition, and thus led to Christ. The arrangements were made by a Mission Service Committee under the direction of the pastor, Rev. R. Sutton.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

A SUNDAY SCHOOL CONFERENCE was held at the Paarl, Cape Colony, at the close of October. About 250 preachers were present, and many valuable addresses were delivered on subjects closely affecting the work of the Sunday-school.

SAINT ETIENNE, LOIRE.—Dr. Hastings Burroughs, under the auspices of the McAll Mission, has established a promising Medical Mission at St. Etienne, a town of 120,000 souls. During the past year 7000 patients have been seen, to all of whom the good news has been imparted. He pleads in the Journal Religieux for help to set up a soup kitchen, the distress being very great.

GREECE.—Mr. BROWN, of the Turkish Missions Aid Society, has received a letter from Dr. Kalopothakes, of the American Mission in Athens, in which he refers to the Mission of Dr. Somerville. He says: "There has been no hindrance to his preaching here, and large audiences have gathered to listen. It will probably deepen the growing feeling among the Greeks in favour of preaching in their own churches, of which there is very little, and the want is deplored by thoughtful people. We have been glad to notice a few priests in the audience. Our own work goes on quietly as usual, with an encouraging degree of interest shown in the various publications. The introduction of the New Testament in the original as a text-book for study in the higher schools is of marked importance.

OPIUM IN BRITISH BURMA.—In the report on criminal justice in British Burma for 1883, Mr. Hodgkinson, Commissioner of the large and populous division of Irawady, says that opium, drink, and gambling are the three curses of the country, and to cope with these evils the present machinery is utterly inadequate. The terrible growth of opium eating and smoking, and the evil effects which have made themselves felt wherever the drug permeates, have been dwelt upon again and again, yet nothing has been done which really tends to check the evil, except in the Kyaukpyu district of the Arakan division, where opium shops have been entirely abolished with the most beneficial result. A large revenue is secured to Government by the present system, but it is secured by sapping the very heart's blood of the people, the better classes of whom most bitterly reproach us, for our apathy and misgovernment in this matter.

TEMPERANCE WORK AMONG SEAMEN.—Several nights recently the Seamen's Christian Friend Society's Chapel in Ratcliff-highway was crowded with seamen and others to hear Gospel Temperance addresses from Mr. and Mrs. Fred Wilson, and other friends. Thirty-six seamen signed the pledge, and many were spiritually blessed. On Sunday week a sermon was preached in the same place to a good company of sailors, by Mr. W. Forbes; many hearts were touched by the preacher's earnest appeals.

Notices of Books, &c.

DWELL DEEP: A Word for the New Year. Y. W. C. A. Institute, 51, Old Steine, Brighton. 1d.; 7s. 6d. per 100. Here is deep and experimental teaching, showing how to dwell in God—in his love, power, and grace. Preachers may find suggestions for an excellent new year's sermon.

A sample packet is sent to us by Messrs. Hazell, Watson & Viney, Kirby-street, Hatton-garden, of the cards, Christmas letters, and other suitable literature distributed at this season by the Christmas Letter Mission. There is great variety and attractiveness about these friendly missives, and their free circulation among the occupants of hospitals and among other invalids must be productive of much good.

A STAR IN THE CROWN. By DANIEL DARLINGHURST. 1s. Jarrold & Son. A story of schoolboy life and of the influence of a Christian lad upon his fellows. After Canon Farrar's "St. Winifreds," it is but a faint outline of life at school—its tricks and shams, with its opportunities for noble courage and truth. Still, as a true picture of this phase of boy-life, this short story should make parents careful as to where they send their boys. In the same volume is "Bessemer Bob," a short story of how a poor lad overcame his besetting sin.

GERALD ROBINSON. The Story of a Boy who was Educated at Home. Dean & Son. This book, which will amuse some, if it serve no better end, reads like a huge joke. Either Gerald is a myth, or he is one of those disagreeably precocious boys of whom other boys wish to know very little. The "Letters" purport to be written by a son to his father, but, from their didactic tone, they might have emanated from a crude mentor to some juvenile Telemachus. If Gerald is a specimen of home-educated boys, he will not inspire parents who love natural boyhood, with a wish to try Mrs. Robinson's method.

WILL AND WORK; OR, ENCOURAGEMENT FOR YOUNG CHRISTIANS. By EMILY P. LEAKEY. 1s. W. Mack. In this precious little record there is much to help, to cheer, and to guide the young Christian. The chapters on "District Visiting," and "Altars," are especially good and fresh; while "Something to do for Jesus" will, for many, solve the problem, "What shall we give our juveniles to do?" The authoress's words, "Be hot for the Lord," and "A tepid Christian is worse than a worldling," express the spirit of her zeal. Altogether, we can recommend this little book for its simple and abiding testimony to the power of a sanctifying Saviour in both will and work.

A YEAR'S MINISTRY. First Series. Christian Commonwealth. These twenty-six Sermons of Dr. Maclaren's display the same brilliancy as their predecessors. They are evidently the offspring of a richly-gifted mind. Imagination, logic, force of language, and wealth of information, both sacred and secular, contribute to their attractiveness. Some of them carry the reader up to heights of thought to which but few present-day discourses soar; and yet we cannot honestly speak of them as being quite the sermons which the spiritual wants of a congregation most need. Possibly their having been prepared with the foresight of publication has imparted to them the quality which, as it seems to us, detracts from their power to edify. There is great "excellency of speech" in them all, and intellectual and critical hearers could hardly fail to be gratified in the hearing of them. But we must confess our doubt whether a less elaborate and philosophical "handling of the Word of God" is not what our congregations, generally speaking, demand of their ministers. (3s. 6d.)

BOONS AND BLESSINGS. By Mrs. S. C. HALL. National Temperance Publication Depôt. This should be the Temperance giftbook of the season. It comprises fifteen tales or sketches, of which some have already had a world-wide circulation, while others appear for the first time. "Building a home with a teacup," and "Digging a grave with a wineglass," are among the best known of the former class. In the new pieces we find some delightful delineations of Irish life and character. "Pepper and her Foes" is a capital story of this sort, and also introduces us to a large circle of Mrs. Hall's canine friends. The real beauty of these sketches lies in their fidelity to truth. They are simple tales of everyday life told with deep pathos and intense sympathy for the victims of drink, appealing to the heart and conscience in a way peculiarly their own. Artists, printers, and binders have united in their endeavour to make a fitting memorial of the gifted lady who used her pen so devotedly for the cause of Temperance in its first feeble, struggling days.

SEVENTEEN CATS. 1s. Cassell & Co. A perfectly true and charmingly natural history of the adventures of a family of seventeen cats and their child companions. Told in simple language, printed in large type, adorned with a number of pictures, and brilliantly bound, it makes a capital shillingsworth for the nursery.

THE SACK AND ITS TREASURES. 1s. E. Wilmshurst. Words of counsel and caution to the young, by the Author of "The Morté Stone," in the guise of pleasant allegory, full of interest and incident, and abounding with Gospel teaching. Just the book to put into the hand of a lad in his early teens, and so attractive that it is sure to be read.

More novelties in Christmas and New Year's Cards. Messrs. Charles Lee & Co., 78, Milton-street, E.C., issue cards with perforated edges, so that the senders may enhance their worth by the introduction of personal work. Some beautiful cards, with flowers hand-painted on gelatine, are sent to us by Mr. J. L. Dixon, 111, Stephen's Green Park, Dublin.

In THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE for December there is an appeal on behalf of the London Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, by Hesba Stretton. She describes what the promoters call "cruelty," and everybody will agree with her that the acts specified come under that designation. The Central Shelter is at 7, Harper-street, Theobald's-road, Holborn, W.C., and the Secretary is Dr. David Buxton, whose office is at the Shelter. The Society is urgently in need of funds to carry on its good work.

AROUND THE CROSS. Mission Sermons. By Rev. W. H. AITKEN. 3s. J. F. Shaw & Co. In these rousing pages we seem to hear the pleading tones of the preacher's voice. We sometimes fear Mr. Aitken's great rapidity of utterance is a hindrance to the hearers of his message. In their printed form, though of course the personality of the speaker is lost, the sermons have fair play. The style is so intense and direct, and the phraseology so graphic, that it is impossible to read them without being powerfully moved. These sixteen discourses are eminently "Mission" utterances, dealing with such subjects as conviction, repentance, justification, assurance, &c. Young preachers may gather much inspiration and guidance from their perusal. To those who are undecided, or halting, or in doubt, they ought to prove as veritable angels sent straight from the throne of God. We prayerfully speed the volume on its gladsome mission of leading sinners to the Cross of Christ.

Some interesting Temperance literature comes from the National Temperance Publication Depôt. DR. SAMUEL JOHNSON AS A TEMPERANCE WITNESS AND MORALIST (4d.) is a contribution to the Johnson Centenary Commemoration, by Dr. DAWSON BURNS. A handy little book, full of material which no doubt Temperance speakers will be glad to use now that it is to be had in so convenient a form. WHO FETCHES YOUR BEER? (1d.) is a capital tract, with a striking frontispiece. It is to be hoped that not a few of its readers will come to the conclusion of the leading character that it is best for "nobody" to fetch it. MODERATE DRINKING (2d.) is a collection of capital speeches delivered at a recent meeting at Exeter Hall, by the Bishop of Exeter, Dr. Richardson, and other noted speakers. THE SCRIPTURE FOOTHOLD OF ABSTINENCE (1d., by THOMAS DICK) is a useful contribution to the consideration of right grounds for Gospel Temperance.

THE SCHOOL OF LIFE. By Pastor OTTO FUNCKE. Kingsley, Mallon, & Co., 49, Bedford-street, W.C. Pastor Funcke has been termed the Spurgeon of Germany, and he presents us in this volume with a series of life pictures from the Book of Jonah, quite worthy of England's great preacher. The work has had a very extensive circulation in Germany, and this English translation ought to have an equally large sale. The author is one of the thoroughly evangelical school, and writes in a vivacious, suggestive and telling style. The volume does not profess to be a "scholarly exposition" of the Book of Jonah, but only a series of experimental and practical lessons drawn from its historical parts, and applied to everyday life. Read from this standpoint it will be found to be a helpful and original book, well worthy of careful reading and prayerful consideration. Some of its chapters may seem to take a wide range, but they are all full of sound truth, and cannot be read without interest and profit. The translator asks us to say that arrangements have been made by which, for a time, any minister of the Gospel or earnest Christian worker can have the book at half-price (2s.) on application to the publishers; we trust many will avail themselves of the opportunity.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

SUNSHINE. Vol. for 1884. G. Stoneman, 67, Paternoster-row. A storehouse of stories, illustrations, enigmas, brief articles, &c. Among the most useful contributions are the questions on the Book of Jonah.

BIBLE LIGHT: for Truth-seekers and Christian Workers. Vol. IV. Shaw & Co. Here are outlines of sermons, notes of Bible readings, brief discourses, and good expositions. All is refreshing, illuminating, spiritual, and sound.

OLD JONATHAN; the District and Parish Helper. Annual Vol. 1s. 6d. W. H. Collingridge. Here are pleasant and instructive readings for old and young, with sixty illustrations. The series of papers entitled "The Start in Life," are of exceptional interest, and are designed to stimulate to personal industry.

OUR OWN MAGAZINE. Annual Volume, 2s. Children's Special Service Mission, 48, Paternoster-row. The publishers of this volume seem to understand the value of first impressions; they have made it so attractive outwardly that many will purchase it if only to possess such a pretty book. They will find, however, that the contents are equally good. Young people like stories, and the numberless narratives here are vouched for as being true—something wonderful in these days of fiction. Parents and friends of youth who desire not merely their entertainment, but their conversion and sanctification, could not find a better book to put into their hands. It is amazingly cheap.

Rev. J. Jackson Wray will edit a new twopenny magazine, entitled "Good Company," to be published by Nisbet & Co., 21, Berners-street, W.

The Bishop of Durham will contribute an article on "Recent Results of the New Testament Research" to the January number of "The Expositor."

In January, the two organs of the movement for the Repeal of Legalised Vice and the Advancement of Morals, "The National League Journal" and "The Sentinel," will be merged into one periodical.

"The Congregationalist," edited by Rev. J. Guinness Rogers, will next year be reduced in price to 6d. The portrait will be discontinued. Arrangements are being made for giving more fully the news of Christian work both at home and abroad.

After the New Year, Mrs. Guinness' serial, "The Regions Beyond," will be issued quarterly. "The Illustrated Missionary News," which was some time since amalgamated with it, will in future be published separately each month, by Messrs. Partridge & Co.

The list of contributors to the new volume of "The Quiver" includes the following eminent Nonconformists:—Rev. Dr. Henry Allon, Rev. Professor Blaikie, Rev. Dr. Llewelyn D. Bevan, Rev. Dr. Horatius Bonar, Rev. George Hill, Rev. Dr. J. Hiles Hitchens, Rev. Dr. Hugh Macmillan, Rev. T. M. Morris, Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, Rev. Professor Roberts (of St. Andrew's), Rev. W. M. Statham, Rev. Dr. John Stoughton, Rev. Dr. W. M. Taylor (of New York), Rev. Dr. Frederick Trestrail; forming altogether the largest and most important list of Nonconformist contributors ever attached to this well-known magazine. Among the Episcopalian contributors are several bishops and other Church dignitaries.

We have also received the following books:—

Elliot Stock:

THE DUBLIN TRACT REPOSITORY.

W. B. HORNER & SON, Evangelical Publishers,

27, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

HAVE pleasure in announcing that they have become the Proprietors of the above well-known Evangelical Institution, and that henceforth the business at 10, D'OLIER-STREET, DUBLIN, will be carried on under their direction, and that their Publishing House, 27, Paternoster-square, will be the London Branch of the DUBLIN TRACT REPOSITORY.

The world-wide reputation of these Publications, of which at one time not fewer than a million were sent out every week, renders it needless to speak of their purely Gospel character. Probably the Publications of no similar Institution have been more blessed to the conversion of souls in all parts of the world than the English, Welsh, French, Spanish, Italian, and German Tracts issued from 10, D'Olier-street, Dublin.

W. B. HORNER & SON will endeavour, by the help of God, to maintain this high standard of pure Gospel truth in all future issues, and for this purpose they earnestly ask the co-operation of writers of Gospel Tracts, Tract Distributors, and Labourers generally in the work of the Lord.

The Dublin Publications will still be supplied in small as well as large quantities (i.e., from Penny to Ten Shilling Packets), at the same cheap rates as formerly. A Catalogue containing full particulars of over One Thousand Books, Tracts, Leaflets, Texts, &c., will be sent free on application.

As heretofore, grants to Colporteurs, Bible carriages, and Evangelists, will be made at greatly reduced prices, as funds may be provided for that purpose.

W. B. HORNER & SON especially call attention to their own stock of Evangelical Publications, consisting of Historical, Biblical, and Expository Works, Pamphlets and Tracts; Gospel Volumes, Illustrated Books for the Young, &c., which will now be added to the Dublin Repository. A Catalogue of these will also be forwarded on application.

All Books, Tracts, Packets, &c., may be ordered as usual, through MESSRS. S. W. PARTRIDGE & CO., 9, Paternoster-row.

RESCUE SOCIETY,

FORMERLY OF 85, QUEEN ST., CHEAPSIDE.

Offices: 79, FINSBURY PAVEMENT, E.C.

SPECIAL ATTENTION is called to the CHANGE IN THE ADDRESS of the Society's Offices, which is rendered necessary by the intended destruction of the old premises for CITY IMPROVEMENTS.

For upwards of THIRTY-ONE YEARS this Society, founded by the late Mr. DANIEL COOPER, has been carrying on its blessed work of helping to reclaim the fallen and save the endangered Young Women and Girls.

In this happy yet arduous work it has been eminently successful, and more than TWELVE THOUSAND and FIVE HUNDRED young persons have passed through its various Homes. Of this large number, gathered from all parts of the United Kingdom and abroad, over EIGHTY PER CENT. have been placed in service, restored to their friends, or otherwise satisfactorily accounted for at the time of their leaving the Homes.

FUNDS ARE NOW MOST URGENTLY NEEDED, several hundred pounds being required to close the year free from debt.

CONTRIBUTIONS will be kindly received as usual by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, Offices of THE CHRISTIAN, or will be thankfully acknowledged by the Secretary, Mr. C. STUART THORPE, 79, Finsbury Pavement, E.C.

Turkish Missions' Aid Society.

For the Promotion of Christian Work within the Lands of the Bible.

THE operations of this Society under its new management are not sufficiently known. It is undenominational, and distributes its funds impartially. Last year forty separate agencies were aided, mostly American, but many of British origin. Contributions are earnestly invited. With a larger revenue a vast amount of solid good might, under the Divine blessing, be accomplished.

THE EXPECTED RAPTURE OF THE CHURCH:

Or, The Analogy of Prophecy and Established Fact.

BY G. WARRAND HOUGHTON.

WHILE many books have been published on the Second Advent, the want of a work dealing with the special subject of the Coming of the Lord in the air for waiting believers has been strongly felt, and is now removed. The argument is inductive throughout, and the conclusions arrived at will be found new and startling to many, the chain of evidence being strong and heavy. The parts to be played by England, Russia, and Turkey regarding Palestine, as clearly pointed out in Scripture, are explained, and a great war between the two former powers is shown must take place between 1885 and 1887 inclusive, when the rapture of the Church is indicated by several converging lines hitherto concealed in Scripture. The historical and futuristic systems are harmonised. A special chapter is devoted to Spiritualism and Theosophy, grave dangers to faith which are fast encroaching. Much new evidence of the truth of Christianity is afforded.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62 PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, E.C.

What are we to do?

A CALL FOR HELP FROM THE WEST!

Very earnestly do the Committee of the LATYMER ROAD MISSION appeal for Help from each Reader.

The lowness of their Funds is causing them great anxiety.

Fully £700 are needed before the end of the year.

The Lord has marvellously blessed the Gospel Temperance work since the opening of the New Hall.

Hundreds of Ragged Girls and Boys are gathered in each evening.

The Mission work consists of Sunday Schools, with an average attendance of 323 children; Children's Gospel Services Evangelistic Meetings; Bands of Hope; Ragged Boys' Evening Shelters; Ragged Girls' Evening Shelters; Mothers' Meeting; Night School; Sick Children's Dinner Table; Soup Kitchen; Farthing Bank; Industrial Exhibitions; Christian Workmen's Club; Infant Day Nursery; Convalescent Homes (Worthing and Ramsgate); and other agencies for good.

Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT will be happy to take charge of Contributions, which may also be sent to EDWARD BLAIR, Esq., Fretherne House, 29, York-place; or to

AULAY MACAULAY, Hon. Sec.

The London Samaritan Society and Homerton Mission.

At the present time the work of the LONDON SAMARITAN SOCIETY is in great and urgent need of Funds to carry on its various efforts for the good of the Poor and Destitute in London, and for its reception of Patients in its Convalescent Home at Sandgate, Kent.

BRIEFLY STATED, OUR OBJECTS ARE—

Free Dinners, Boots and Clothing for Destitute Children.

Free Breakfasts, Dinners, Soup Suppers, Coal, Clothing, and general assistance to the really Destitute Poor in all parts of London.

Free Lodgings to deserving applicants.

Assisting Emigrants by Loans, or otherwise, as agreed.

A Sea-side and Convalescent Home at Sandgate for Men, Women, and Children from all parts of the United Kingdom.

Assistance is given to the Destitute without any Sectarian distinction whatever, and without favour or partiality. Enquiries are made by our own Agents, or by the very many Clergymen, Ministers, Secretaries of Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, District Visitors, City Missionaries, Ragged School Workers, and others who take a deep interest in our work, and act as Honorary Almoners on behalf of the Society, and at whose Schoolrooms or Mission Halls Free Meals have been given by this Society. Over 100,000 Free Meals were given last winter.

DONATIONS will be most gratefully received by Mr. JOHN JAMES JONES; or

Mr. HENRY HICKS BOARD, Secretary, 57 & 59, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C.

Cheques and Drafts to be crossed FULLER, BANBURY & Co. P.O. Orders to be drawn on General Post Office.

A LETTER FROM M. RABINOWITCH.

ANOTHER very interesting communication from this Jewish Leader has been received by Rev. J. Wilkinson; we append the greater part of it:—

"Beloved of the Lord, and Brother in the glorified Messiah, John Wilkinson,—Your welcome letter of the 4th inst. reached me safely. Now I praise God for his goodness and mercy to the house of Israel, in our country Russia. I am able to inform you that on the first of this month I received from the Home Secretary permission to introduce into Russia, from abroad, my writings, which have been edited in the German language by Professor Delitzsch, of Leipsig, as also in the Hebrew, בכורי תאנה 'The First-ripe Fig,' a copy of which I sent you some time ago. I have also been informed from high quarters that all my efforts among my kinsmen, in turning their hearts to the Messiah of God, their Redeemer, and their eyes to behold Him whom they pierced, are acceptable and pleasing to the princes who occupy the first seats in the Government.

"On bended knees before God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, blessed for ever, I say, blessed is He who has by his great love adopted us as children in Jesus Christ, according to his own will, and has revealed to us the secret of his purpose concerning his work in the fulness of the times, viz., that He will put all things in heaven and on earth, under the Messiah, and that all Israel shall then be saved with an everlasting salvation, and that Israel shall then be called by a new name, 'the holy people, the redeemed of Jehovah.' Amen.

"Last week I sent to the Censor of Odessa a request that he would permit me to publish the קול קוֹרֵא 'The voice of him that crieth,' and another request, signed by my followers, addressed to the Home Secretary, asking him to allow us to meet together for worship in some special place, apart from the place of worship frequented by our brethren of the old covenant, that we may practice, unhindered, all religious services according to the teaching of the New Testament, because the children of Israel of the new dispensation, who are united to the Lord, cannot worship together with the Jews. I hope in the God of hope that through the depth of the riches of his wisdom and boundless mercy, He will give us grace in the eyes of the princes and rulers, who by the authority of God are ordained to minister for our welfare. When my foot stands on firm ground I shall be encouraged, by the help of those who love God and Christ, to prepare a way, and to cast up a highway to proclaim to the ends of our large country: 'Say ye to the daughters of Zion, Behold thy salvation cometh' (Is. lxii. 2). In all my work I do not cease to acknowledge my indebtedness towards the authorities who are the ministers of God. According to the law of our country, it is prohibited publicly to preach or to hold meetings without the sanction of the Government, and these laws stand till now in my way, preventing me from doing my work to any large extent.

"I am unable to tell out and describe to you, beloved in Christ, how greatly your English people have helped me unconsciously, through the newspapers, especially The Times, and other publications, which you sent me to strengthen and refresh me in work for the name of Christ. Your warm friend, who is glorying in the crucified Jesus Christ.

"JOSEPH RABINOWITCH."

"קול קוֹרֵא" (Kol Kora).

"'The voice of him that crieth' (Is. xl. 3).

"'Who among you will give ear to this? who will hearken and hear for the time to come?' (Is. xlii. 23).

"My brethren, the children of Jacob, who is there among you to whom the memory of our holy ancestors, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, who obtained the promise from the Most High God, that through their seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed, is still sacred? Who is there among you in whose eyes are still holy, the law, the statutes and the judgments, which God commanded to his servant Moses in Horeb, concerning all Israel? Who is there among you that has love and pity to the house of David, King of Israel, to whom God formerly spake in a vision, saying: 'He shall cry unto me, Thou art my Father, my God, and the rock of my salvation. Also I will make him, my firstborn, higher than the kings of the earth. His seed shall endure for ever, and his throne as the sun before me'? Who is there among you in whom the love of money and of business has not extinguished the last spark of faith in the words of our prophets, the faithful ones, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and the like? Who is there among you truly concerned about the sad condition of our brethren, and are waiting for the consolation of Israel? Who is there among you that wishes not to see death till the appearance of the Messiah of Jehovah, whom He has ordained to be the glory of Israel in the sight of all the nations?

"Let him not keep silence, but let him lift up his voice, and say to his fellow, 'Be strong!' Let us take each other by the hand, and let us return to Jehovah! Let us unite together as one band of Israelites in whom there is no guile, to bend our knees before our Brother, Jesus of Nazareth, our Messiah, who was, who is, and who shall be for ever! Let us confess in the sight of all the people of the earth, saying: 'We are verily guilty, concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul, when he besought us, and we would not hear; therefore is this distress come upon us' (Gen. xlii. 21).

"Let us rise and take upon us his yoke, under which there is rest for every living soul, as He himself said, 'My yoke is easy, and my burden is light.' Let us love in sincerity Him who said, 'I am the way, the truth, and the life;' and then you will know the truth, and the truth will make you free. Make haste, my brethren, and look to Him whom you have pierced, and then He will quickly come to us, together with his Heavenly Father, and they will take up their abode in us, and we shall answer, and say: 'Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.' Amen אמן J. R."

OUR SOLDIERS ABROAD.

DEAR SIR,—Two Scripture-readers left England on the 4th inst. to minister to the troops in the Nile and Bechuanaland expeditions. Mr. Ewing sailed in the Indus for the former, Mr. Scarlett in the Spartan for the latter. They have been sent forth in faith and prayer, believing that the Christian people of England will gladly meet all the expenses, not merely of salary but of travelling, and the many heavy unavoidable contingent expenses which must be incurred if they are to reach and to accompany the troops.

If testimony is needed to the value of such a ministry, let the soldier speak. The following letter appeared in The Scotsman:—

"Fort George, Nov. 8.

"Sir,—In a file of your paper we saw that the United Presbyterian Presbytery, at a meeting held by them, petitioned Government to increase the staff of Ministers in Egypt for the troops there. We feel grateful to them for remembering us; but if they really want to do us a benefit, let them request the directors of the Army Scripture Readers' Society to send out two or more men. They are the class of men our regiments want, and if they had their choice they would choose them in place of chaplains. It is a shame and a disgrace to a Christian country that they can only send one Reader among 15,000 men.

"A VOICE FROM THE RANKS."

I shall be very grateful for any pecuniary assistance, as will also the Committee of the Society I represent.

W. J. EVERED POOLE,
Association Secretary, Army Scripture Readers' Society.

Enfield House, Southampton, Dec. 6.

RATCLIFF WELCOME HOME.—An interesting gathering of destitute men was held here on Friday evening. After supper the Gospel was preached to them and some professed to receive the Word. Rev. A. Mearns and others took part. These meetings will be continued during the winter if the means are provided.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For great blessing on the Mission services held at Congregational Church, Openshaw, by Mr. James N. Carr and Mr. William Hall ——For much blessing on a Y.M.C.A. Mission in three parishes in the North of Ireland.

PRAYER.—Miss Bubb writes from Grays, where she has been engaged in Gospel work: "I have had a serious illness, the effect of cold and overwork, and have been quite laid aside for some weeks past; it has left me very weak, and not likely to be fit for work for some time to come. Do ask prayer that I may be kept peaceful, leaving all in the Lord's hands. God has sent me helpers, who are carrying on the meetings. Ask prayer that the Lord will bless them."——For the Sunday evangelistic services at Bournemouth, Dec. and Jan., to be conducted by Captain Dawson.——For a week of special services in Beckenham Public hall, Dec. 9 to 15.——That success may attend the efforts being made to bring about in England the adoption of a system of Government work for the poor, as in Amsterdam.

POOR AND SUFFERING WOMEN.

SIR,—A great proportion of the patients admitted to the Chelsea Hospital for Women are those upon whom the numberless misfortunes of ill-health most heavily fall—the poor gentlewoman, the governess, the wife of the poorly-paid clerk, the artisan, and the very poor. Their homes are altogether unsuited for the performance of a critical operation, and they cannot have the special nursing and care which their condition demands. It is, therefore, obvious that the work of restoring mothers, wives, and daughters to that health upon which the comfort and well-being, and often the actual maintenance of families so frequently depend, is one of real value and importance.

The Board have had to borrow £2000 to pay off pressing liabilities, and as the hospital has no endowment of any kind, it will be impossible to keep the beds occupied, unless funds are bountifully provided by the benevolent.

Your obedient servant,
CADOGAN, President.

Chelsea House, Cadogan-place, S.W.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—Dec. 14, Rev. xxi. 15–27; Dec. 15, Rev. xxii. 1–9; Dec. 16, Rev. xxii. 10–21; Dec. 17, Ps. cxli. 1–10; Dec. 18, Ps. cxliii. 1–12; Dec. 19, Ps. cxliv. 1–15; Dec. 20, Mal. i. 1–14.

THE WAIL OF THE CHILDREN.—A Christian worker of many years' standing has opened a small home for neglected and destitute children, from a few days old up to ten years of age. Ladies interested in this Christlike work are invited to co-operate. Address Miss Wilson, 7, Woodbine Cottages, Stoney-avenue, Croft's Estate, Walthamstow, E.

LEARNING-BY-HEART UNION.—Members are requested kindly to notify any change of address, and others who may wish to become members are invited to apply to the Secretary early in December. The Union is for learning by heart selected portions of Scripture bearing on a special subject. Prayer is the subject for next year. The subscription is 3d. Secretary: Mrs. May, care of Mr. E. Benthall, 30, Tregunter-road, South Kensington, S.W.

HOMES FOR WORKING-GIRLS IN LONDON.—The young women resident in the nine houses of the above Institution were invited by an unnamed friend to visit the Doré Gallery, in Bond-street. Two hundred and forty put in an appearance at 8 p.m., and for over two hours examined, under the guidance of Mr. C. Claude Birch, who acted as cicerone on the occasion, the pictures on exhibition. Mr. Birch's descriptions were listened to with great attention and interest.

YOUTHS' INSTITUTE, WESTMINSTER.—A very enjoyable anniversary meeting in connection with this excellent institution was held last week, Sir Robert Carden in the chair. Prizes were distributed for proficiency in various branches of knowledge, and an encouraging report of the year's work was read by Mr. Payne. The various speakers of the evening were loud in the praises of Mrs. Barker Harrison, who continues to take so deep and practical an interest in the work of the Institute.

Forthcoming Meetings.

Mission and other Appeals.

SAILORS IN MEDITERRANEAN PORTS.—It is intended to hold tea-meetings for sailors during the Christmas season at various ports on the Mediterranean, with the view of counteracting the allurements of the drink shops. Christian friends are asked to provide a supply of suitable little books for the men; they may be sent to Mr. S. BURROWES, Sailors' Missionary, 93, Via Piedigrotta, Naples.

LANGFORD, LECHDALE, BERKS.—The pastor, Rev. E. Austin, and congregation of the church at Langford, Oxon, earnestly solicit the help of Christian friends in clearing off the debt of £50 still remaining on the new chapel, which was opened in October last. The people, who are mostly poor, have been doing their utmost, and even so small a debt would be a serious drawback to the work.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.—Help is very urgently needed by this society, especially in connection with the Thrawl-street Mission. The new hall recently erected has greatly increased the expenses; and now the distress arising from want of work is very great. Scores of people are homeless, and to shelter them lodgings are provided, as well as food for the starving; assistance will be gratefully received by the Secretary, Mr. JAMES ATKINSON, whose address is 10, Enfield-road, South Kingsland, N.

POPLAR, E.—There is a great deal of destitution at present among the men who casually work at the docks in this neighbourhood. The friends of the East London Tract Mission are doing what they can to provide meals for these men, and also for the children. They earnestly ask for help, which may be sent to Mr. W. H. THOMAS, 47, Dee-street, Poplar, E.

OBITUARY.—The death is announced of Canon Girdlestone, Mr. Craven, of the Congo Mission, Mr. R. B. Panton, an earnest Christian worker in Jamaica, Pastor Laplace, of the French Reformed Church, and Pastor Standt, of Kornthal, near Stuttgart.

SIR ANDREW CLARK'S LECTURE TO YOUNG MEN.—We understand that the publication by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton of the address at the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., referred to in our last issue, will be delayed some little time in order to allow of its careful revision and amplification.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday Morning, December 6, 1884.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan and Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O.O.'s payable to Morgan and Scott, at G.P.O.

[ADVERTISEMENTS.]

"The Oxford" Music Hall Services—Per C. E. H.; Anon. (Dorking), 10s.

Dr. Barnardo acknowledges, with many thanks, the receipt of six drawings from "S. J.," as a contribution towards the annual Sale in aid of the Homes for Destitute Children.

HELP WANTED FOR THE ANNUAL SALE

ON BEHALF OF

Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children,

Now Sheltering, Educating, and Training over 1,300 Poor Boys and Girls.

Will all who are preparing gifts for the Annual Sale on behalf of the Homes

KINDLY SEND THEM IN AT ONCE,

for as yet but very little has been received? Will those whose busy fingers are at work for the Sale, remember that shirts for boys and men, suits for little boys, aprons and pinafores for girls, and sets of baby clothing are particularly valuable additions, being much asked for and readily sold. Of course, besides these, jewellery, old coins, old china, curios, musical instruments, and fancy work, trinkets, articles of vertu, books, drawings, bric-a-brac, and other examples of the thousand-and-one tasteful ornaments which are sought for by purchasers, will be very gratefully received and acknowledged.

The SALE will this year be of the SAME CHARACTER as LAST YEAR that is to say,

Instead of holding a Public Bazaar at the West End during the month of December, as formerly, all the Goods received will be made up into

£5 and £10 Boxes. These Boxes will each contain a very excellent selection of at least the value of £6 and £12 respectively, and will be sent on receipt of P.O. Order or Cheque to any part of the country.

Ladies ordering these Boxes confer a great benefit on the "Homes"; for by this easy method all the articles received may be disposed of without any loss in the way of such expenses as are usually incurred by holding a Bazaar at the West End of London.

Many kind-hearted sympathisers have already expressed warm approval of this plan, and promised to purchase boxes, with the contents of which they propose to hold in their own houses, to which their personal friends can be invited during the present season.

If there be many articles left over unsold, they can be disposed of in the last week of January (D.V.), in the New Hall of the "Edinboro' Castle."

Dr. Barnardo earnestly invites all who love poor children, to co-operate with him in this new plan to increase the funds of the "Homes," by which, too, all the wearying, disappointing, and expensive drawbacks of a public Bazaar may be avoided.

The Boxes, carefully lined and packed, will be ready for transmission on the 10th December, and can be despatched on receipt of order to any railway station in the Kingdom. Applications (PREPAID), with full instructions as to conveyance, etc., should be sent in as soon as possible, addressed to

The TRADE MANAGER,
18, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

To all who have already in any degree helped by Contributions of Useful or Fancy Articles, Dr. Barnardo now desires to offer the expression of his very grateful acknowledgments.

18 to 26, STEPNEY CAUSEWAY, LONDON, E.

ARMY SCRIPTURE READERS' and SOLDIERS' FRIEND SOCIETY, 4, Trafalgar-square, Charing cross.

Patrons—His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury; Right Hon. Earl of Shaftesbury.

President—GENERAL SIR A. J. LAWRENCE, K.C.B.

SPECIAL APPEAL.

The friends of the soldier are earnestly appealed to for funds for the continued support of the Society. Ninety Scripture Readers are now actively employed in the Army at home and abroad.

With such unquestionable testimony on all sides to the beneficial influence of the Reader in camp, in barrack, and in hospital, we cannot come to any other conclusion than that the Lord's blessing is resting in no small degree upon this Institution; and with this conviction deeply impressed on our hearts, we lay this matter before all who can feel for a soldier's trials, a soldier's temptations, a soldier's devotion to his Queen and country, but, above all for a soldier's everlasting welfare, confident—nay, more than confident, assured—that He will cause unknown supporters to spring up upon the right hand and upon the left, and stimulate old friends to fresh exertions. Two additional Readers left England on the 4th inst.: Mr. Scarlett for Bechuanaland in the Spartan, and Mr. Ewing for Egypt in the Indus.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Treasurer, V. G. M. Holt, Esq., 17, Whitehall-place; at the Bankers, National Provincial Bank of England, 212, Piccadilly; by the Secretary, Mr. William A. Blake; by the Hon. Secretary, Colonel J. W. F. Sandwith; or by Major Evered Poole, Enfield House, Southampton.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of SHAFTESBURY, K.G.

ESTABLISHED 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES:

27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN; AND 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE, or by the Proprietors of this paper.

NOTE.—Subscriptions or Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Friends will please notice the exact title "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews.

This Society undertakes a work beyond the aim and capability of ordinary Missionary Societies. It is founded on an unsectarian basis, and receives its support from Christians of all denominations. Its Committee and Agents belong to several Christian bodies, and its Honorary Secretaries are A. SAPHIR, D.D., and J. H. REGG, D.D.

The Society has upwards of 100 who carry the Gospel to their brethren in England, Italy, Germany, Switzerland, Austria, Russia, Turkey, and North Africa. Their labours are supplemented by the work of schoolmasters and colporteurs. Tracts and copies of the Scriptures are circulated. Many Jews have by this Society been led to believe that "Jesus is the Christ." Much good has been done among the thousands of Jews in London by the Missionaries, by the "House of Call," and by the Mission House, 26, Church-street, Spitalfields.

Increased Funds are urgently needed, and will be thankfully received by the Secretary, REV. J. DUNLOP, at the Office, 96, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, London.

Cruden's Concordance

(UNABRIDGED).

The special features of this edition are the NEW TRANSLATION, Revision, and Extension of the PROPER NAMES OF THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS, with their meanings in the Original Languages.

The Twelve following exquisite Steel Plate Engravings:—

Samaria.	Mount Tabor.	Shechem—Sychar.
Elisha's Fountain, Jericho.	Tyre.	Tiberias.
Rephidim.	Hebron.	Bethany.
Damascus.	Jerusalem from the South.	Athens.

And Six beautifully-coloured Maps.

The Rev. J. L. PORTER, D.D., Professor of Biblical Criticism, speaking of the Steel Plate Engravings, says:—

"I have examined with care the views for Biblical Illustration. . . . The Engravings are very beautiful. In clearness, accuracy, and general effect, they surpass, I think, any I have seen. The places represented are all familiar to me; and I have been particularly struck by the fidelity with which your artist has reproduced Frith's admirable photographs."—J. L. PORTER.

The Tabernacle, The Priesthood, and The Offerings;

With the Spiritual Lessons derived from the Ritual and Ceremonies of the Old Dispensation.

By HENRY W. SOLTAU,

Author of "The Holy Vessels of the Tabernacle," "The Soul and its Difficulties, &c.

With Memoir of the Author, FOUR BEAUTIFUL COLOURED ILLUSTRATIONS, and numerous smaller engravings.

"The book is full of teaching, spiritual, and far-reaching; and we have much enjoyed reading it. The work is a good five shillings'-worth."—Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, in The Sword and Trowel.

"Of this work we can speak very highly. It is not a mere description of Temple Ritual and Jewish Ceremonies; but is more of a commentary and exposition; and is rich in evangelical teaching. The illustrations in colour and gold are exceedingly beautiful."—Christian Age.

"The reading of this book has been to us a precious means of grace: and to all who love truth sweetly told we advise its study. It is full of Christ. The truths of the Gospel gleam on every page; and we feel that we shall be doing good work for any Christian brother whom we may induce to read it. Nothing seems strained: all comes out naturally. Of the get-up of the book, the binding is good, the printing is exquisite, the illustrations are elegant, and taken altogether we have not derived for some time so much pleasure and profit in reading a single volume."
The Baptist Messenger.

Foxe's Book of Martyrs.

A Complete and Authentic Account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Triumphant Deaths of Primitive and Protestant Martyrs in all parts of the World.

By John Foxe.

WITH TWELVE FULL-PAGE ILLUSTRATIONS.

"As a complete edition of Foxe's Martyrs, this is by far the handiest and most attractive we know. In paper, type, illustrations, and binding, the book does great credit to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, to whom the Christian public are indebted for this timely publication."—Primitive Methodist.

"Messrs. Morgan and Scott have just published a new edition of Foxe's Book of Martyrs, which deserves a word of greeting. The present edition extends far beyond Foxe's times; having been enriched by the Rev. J. MILNER and others; and brought down to the present century by the Rev. INGRAM COBBIN. Altogether it is a cheap and complete Book of Martyrs, well printed and elegantly bound; and suitable for a gift-book."—Record.

P. P. Bliss;

HIS LIFE AND WORK.

Edited by Major WHITTLE and Rev. W. GUEST.

Containing also an Introduction by D. L. MOODY, and Memorial Notice by IRA D. SANKEY.

"A most interesting and invaluable book, both for the young and the aged, and cannot be too highly prized or too widely circulated; in fact, from the good it is calculated to do, it ought to be in the hands of every English reader."
Midland Gazette.

"Among the sweet singers who have arrested the attention of the public ear, cultivated the public taste, and softened the public heart by the production of the thoughts and music of their souls, no one passed a more interesting and instructive life and suffered a sadder death than Mr. P. P. Bliss, a sketch of whose career has been published at an extremely low price by Messrs. Morgan and Scott. The early life of Mr. Bliss is full of much that is of great utility, not only as an example of perseverance and success, but also as affording a remarkable instance of Christian experience."

"MANNA CAKE."

Children take it readily; they do not suspect its properties; they like its sweet, strong flavour. Truly termed by an Agent, "The Children's Friend." Manna Cake is the mildest and yet the most certain in action of all aperients; it does not gripe, and leaves no after constipation. A singularly mild, pleasant, and efficacious substitute for Castor Oil.

From W. H. HAYWARD, Chemist, Trowbridge:—"A Physician in the West of England says he gave Calomel and Jalap in repeated doses without effect, but a Manna Cake acted almost immediately."

Ask for Manna Cake, price 1½d. per cake, or 1s. 3d. per doz. of any chemist or medicine vendor. Wholesale of BAROLAY'S; EDWARDS'; HOVENDEN'S; NEWBERY'S; MAY ROBERTS; SANGER & SONS; SUTTON & Co.; &c., &c.

OF WEEKLY CASES.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "The Christian," WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

PHTHISIS.—CASE of a LADY, in IRELAND.

In January of the present year I received from Miss M. Simmons, of Donaghmore, County Tyrone, a statement of her case, from which the following is an extract:—

"Had had winter cough from childhood, but had been especially ailing since January, 1882. Had lost flesh from the beginning. At present suffering with cough, heavy yellow expectoration, occasionally spitting of blood, flushings, pains in the chest and side, and soreness under the right breast. Had been attended by two medical men, whose report showed her to be in an exceedingly critical state." She was fully advised by letter and medicine sent.

In less than a fortnight the pains were relieved by the Liniment I prescribed. At this time other special instructions were given in consequence of an irritable condition of her stomach.

Letters followed monthly, in which slow and steady improvement was manifest. September 22, after discontinuing her medicine a short time, she writes: "It has done me an immense good. I am quite strong now, and have got stout."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

JANUARY WEEK OF UNIVERSAL PRAYER.—The Evangelical Alliance, by its representatives throughout the world, has issued an invitation and programme for the Week of Prayer, commencing January [illegible]. Papers containing the suggested subjects may be obtained of the Secretaries of the Alliance, 7, Adam-street, Strand, London. The co-operation of Ministers and others friendly to the object, in all lands, is earnestly invited.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

GRATEFUL THANKS FOR DONATIONS RECEIVED THUS FAR!

I believe it will be a source of gratification to the Readers of THE CHRISTIAN to learn that the Appeal for CONTRIBUTIONS to close this year's work without the incubus of any outstanding liability, s being RESPONDED TO MOST KINDLY.

5,000 Meals have had to be provided every week, for the maintenance of the Inmates, and the Homes, and the Open-All-Night Refuge; and all other expenses, for Clothing, &c., have been correspondingly great. While at times during the year the contributions have fallen far short of the expenses, yet the work has been carried on irrespective of any fluctuations of income.

£700 IN CONTRIBUTIONS before the 31st December will NOW MEET ALL NECESSITIES. The Reader is asked to Contribute.

Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, THE CHRISTIAN Office, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., will as usual, receive Donations; or they may be sent direct to Office: 200, Euston Road, N.W.

EDWARD W. THOMAS, SEC.

THE COW CROSS MISSION

(Preaching Stations, Accommodation for over 2,000 Persons),

Gloucester Hall, and Sadler's Wells Theatre, Clerkenwell.

21st ANNUAL APPEAL.

This Mission has for its primary object the preaching of the Gospel in the Mission Hall, in the Great Theatre, in adjacent Factories, Hospitals, Workhouses, Prisons, Public Houses, in Open Air, by the Sale of Bibles, and reading aloud the Word of God in great thoroughfares; by Cottage Meetings and House-to-House Visitation; also Bible Readings, Mothers' Meetings, Temperance Lectures, Sunday and Week Evening Instruction to the Inhabitants of the parish of Clerkenwell, which has a population of 70,000 souls.

The efforts of the Mission are conducted under the general supervision of well-known Christian Friends, on purely undenominational principles.

The prayerful sympathy and pecuniary help of the people of God are greatly needed at this moment, and are earnestly appealed to, on behalf of this thoroughly Evangelistic work, that it may continue, as in past years, to be a means of spiritual blessing to perishing sinners, and that help in temporal things may not be lacking for the sick poor during the inclement season of Winter. It is sincerely to be hoped that through such help we may be enabled to continue our Halfpenny Dinners to the thousands of poor little children who will doubtless crowd in upon us from the second week in November till the second week in March.

A SPECIAL APPEAL.

"Retiring poverty still hides its head," and must be sought out to be relieved. We are particularly anxious to provide a plain but substantial dinner for a certain number of poor families, well known to us, especially those of the "household of faith," on Christmas Day at their own homes; also during the first week of the New Year, to give our Sunday School and Band of Hope Children an extra dinner of Roast Beef and Plum Pudding, and some articles of Warm Winter Clothing, &c.

Contributions will be thankfully received at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.; at the Office of WORD AND WORK, 48, Paternoster-row, E.C.; by Mr. G. KIRKHAM, 15, Beresford-road, Highbury, N.; Mr. F. NEWTH, 44, Percival-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.; also by

Yours obediently,

WILLIAM CATLIN,

TRAINING AND CONVALESCENT HOME, THE LIMES, FELTHAM.

DEAR FRIENDS,

The present is a time of extreme need. I therefore most earnestly solicit contributions, feeling sure that I have only to make our position known, to enlist your aid and sympathy; especially as I plead for the helpless little ones who fill our homes, and who but for the shelter afforded would be in circumstances too sad to contemplate. May He to whom the silver and the gold belong, incline your hearts to send speedy and liberal aid, so that we may, as in former times, realise that the Lord is our help in time of trouble. Yours in the Master's service,

MARIE HILTON.

Clothing and Toys for Christmas will be gladly received, and may be sent to the above address.

BY

JAMES BOWKER, F.R.G.S.I.

With COLOURED FRONTISPIECE, and TWENTY-NINE other Illustrations.

CONTENTS.

I.—The Swallows—"Seeking for Sunshine."
II.—The Sea-Gulls—A White Coat.
III.—The Peacocks—Fine Feathers.
IV.—The Cuckoo—Singing in Spring-Time.
V.—The Sparrows—"Five for Two Farthings."
VI.—The Pelican—"For those I Love."
VII.—The Raven—A Miracle every Morning.
VIII. The Eagle and the Eagle's Nest.
IX.—The Ark and the Dove—"Weary."
X.—"Under His Wings."

EXTRACT FROM CHAP. II., "THE SEA-GULLS."

"Often when I am on the beach, or even from my window, I look across the Bay; and I can just see a speck gleaming against the grey sands, or the surf-beaten sullen-looking cliffs of Howth beyond; and I know at once what the speck is by its whiteness. At other times when the storm has come, and the waves are sweeping over the rocks, I see a light speck upon the dark cloud curtain; and I know it is a brave little Sea-gull in its white coat. So when we have given ourselves to Jesus, it should be easy for those round about us to see that we have. When, like the bird on the sands, we are doing our lowly work, the white robe should be visible; and in sorrow and trouble the whiteness should gleam as it did in the lives of those men of whom we are told in the New Testament that others "took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus." (Pages 20 and 21.)

Small Books suitable for Christmas.

RUTH'S CHRISTMAS;
OR,
WHAT CAN A GIRL DO?

BY L. F. P. M., Author of "Jane Arnold," &c.

16 Pages, Tract Size. Price 1s. per dozen; 7s. 6d. per 100.

A very pleasing and profitable Christmas story. It tells of how the words and example of a little girl were the means of bringing peace, comfort, and blessing to a home that had previously been cheerless, wretched, and sinful.

ECHOES OF THE BELLS.

BY ISA BELL, Author of "Called at Even," &c.

Royal 32mo. 32 Pages. Price Twopence.

Also published as a Tract. Price 1s. per dozen.

"Christmas Bells! Let us hear what they say! Let us try to catch a faint refrain of their mysterious melodies! If we listen intently, it may be that some echo of their music will mingle with the clashing discords of earth through all the coming year until the silver notes peal out afresh with the return of the ever-blessed time 'when Christ was but a child.'"—EXTRACT.

THAT MAN SAVED MY LIFE.

BY ANNA SHIPTON, Author of "Waiting Hours," &c.

Price 1s. per dozen.

"I knew no one was waiting for me at the station where I must soon alight; no one even expected me: but the sadness was but the background to a fairer picture, as the shadows of earth are needed to bring forth the brightness of heaven's beauty. I knew that every setting sun was a station nearer my home that gleamed through the midst of the coming dawn; that there I should find all I loved; and there I should behold His glory, and dwell with Him who was upholding me in this hour of weakness and weariness."—EXTRACT.

CHRISTMAS CAROL.

THERE DWELT IN OLD JUDEA.

"There dwelt in Old Judea
A maiden fair to see—
The mother mild, and undefiled
Of a blessèd babe was she.
Oh, Noël, sing Noël,
And merry be alway,
For Christ was born in the early morn,
All on a Christmas Day."

Price 1s. per dozen; or 6s. per 100.

THERE CAME A LITTLE CHILD TO EARTH.

"There came a little Child to earth
Long ago;
And the angels of God proclaimed His birth
High and low.
Out in the night, so calm and still,
Their song was heard,
For they knew that the Child on Bethlehem's hill
Was Christ the Lord."

Price 1s. 4d. per 100.

(Musical Leaflets, No. 3.)

A CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S GREETING TO "BLUE RIBBONS"

A REAL CHRIST.
A NEW YEAR'S ADDRESS
BY REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

Price 1s. per dozen.

"And if I weep for sin, shall I not also rejoice that I am without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing, through the Blood and Righteousness of Jesus Christ? Sin is real; let the Christ be real."—EXTRACT.

EVERLASTING FLOWERS;
OR,
MY NEW YEAR'S GIFT.

BY ANNA SHIPTON, Author of "Tell Jesus," &c.

Price 1s. per dozen.

"I said, 'Lord, give me a New Year's gift. Give Thou!' My thoughts ran over the spiritual gifts I needed, but did not pause there. 'Give me a soul, Lord; give me H——'s soul for my New Year's gift.' I was desirous of everlasting flowers for my Saviour's crown."—Extract.

The Christian.

CHRISTIANITY AND CHEAPNESS.

TWICE in our hearing within a fortnight it has been said by men of business, that they would rather work for men of the world than for Christians. It is also said that Committees have no bowels of compassion, and that this applies to those which represent Christian institutions as much as any other. These views are more widely entertained than it is pleasant to think, and though we do not by any means endorse them, we cannot deny that there are some grounds for them.

It is notorious that those who act in the name of the God of all the earth expect to pay reduced prices for work done and for goods supplied. This is true with respect to the payment of the Ministry; except in the case of specially popular men and the higher dignitaries of the Church; true of city missionaries, Scripture-readers, and Bible-women; true of work done for religious purposes—it must be done cheap.

Many Christians are anxious to give; and men and women who never refuse a shilling or half-crown for religious or charitable purposes, screw down and beat down prices in a way that makes them very disagreeable customers. But this, in plain terms, is what the Lord calls robbery for burnt-offering; and if no generous man likes to have the needy crushed in his name, how supremely offensive must it be to Him whose are the cattle upon a thousand hills, to be represented as unable or unwilling to pay a fair day's wages for a fair day's work, or the honest value of the commodities He needs. How contradictory is such a spirit to the words of Him who emptied Himself, and said, "Freely ye have received, freely give!" who gave Himself for us, and proved by giving up his life that "it is more blessed to give than to receive."

"The house of God, which is the Church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth," cannot afford to buy cheap and sell dear; cannot afford to crush the needy and to oppress the hireling in his wages. "Ye are the light of the world," but this niggardly spirit obscures the light. "Ye are the salt of the earth," but this habit, so contrary to that of the Lord, instead of being an antiseptic, is itself of the earth, earthy.

We are told that "it is as useless to protest against the law of supply and demand, as it would be to complain that two and two make four." But does the law of supply and demand require us to put up work for competition to the lowest bidder, which of necessity means oppressing the hireling in his wages, and driving the manufacturer to require his "hands" to do that work at less than the usual price, thus preparing the way for making the reduction permanent.

It is said that "private interference with the action of irresistible laws can only modify their action by the introduction of some other element; and when that comes to be analysed it will be found to be personal charity. . . . Consideration for the poor affects mainly the distribution of what has been earned in obedience to these great moral laws."

We reply that there can be no "irresistible laws," no "moral laws," except the laws of God. And we must express, in the strongest way, our belief that no laws of God oblige us, or even permit us, to obtain money by getting work done for wages which, even if they be "ordinary wages," do not fairly remunerate those who receive them.

The argument of the writer in the Congregationalist, from which we quote, amounts to a defence, and more than a defence, an assertion of the justice of gaining profit on low wages, and giving it away afterwards as charity. If an employer pays "twice the ordinary wages, the increased amount will simply be so much bounty."

Now, this notion appears to us to be one of the most mischievous of current commercial ideas, and we hope to see it exploded. Is it not more like God's righteousness that employers should pay adequate wages for work done, than that they should pay insufficient wages, and call the surplus which they give away—charity? There are brewers and distillers who give largely to rescue the fallen, but who do more mischief by their business in one night than they do good in a year. And those who are not brewers and distillers may contribute largely to good works, while those whom they employ are inadequately paid.

We do most seriously controvert the position that the laws of supply and demand are "irresistible laws," or "moral laws." Indeed, if they were, how could the writer in the Congregationalist denounce, as he does in the following scathing terms, those who implicitly obey these irresistible moral laws? "A more contemptible being, one who has in him less of the spirit of Christ than the money grubber, who lives on the straits and necessities of the poor, and cares not though his workpeople be huddled together in dens in which he would not allow his dogs to live and starve on the miserable pittance he flings to them, we do not know. But such men are not the real types of English capitalists. Such men there are, and if Christ's teachers have shrunk from exposing their wickedness, the sooner they begin the better."

SEAMEN AND EMIGRANTS AT PLYMOUTH.—We have lately had in this port the steamers Trojan and Spartan, with about 600 volunteers for Bechuanaland. To these we distributed papers, magazines, Testaments, Gospels, and hymn-books. The Gulf of Venice, with 500 emigrants for Sydney, Ionic and Australasia, for New Zealand and Sydney, with passengers and emigrants, had also been visited. We have at present, in addition to our own fishermen, some 1000 Cornish fishermen, who are here for six weeks prosecuting the herring fishery; they are always glad to get any good reading. I shall be glad to receive parcels from any additional helpers (carriage paid), addressed to me, either to 1, Hoe Park-place, Plymouth; or the Bethel, Castle-street. J. P. Norris, Plymouth. Sailors' Missionary.

"THE EXPOSITOR."

THE change made in the editorship of The Expositor, which has been transferred from the hands of Rev. Dr. Cox, of Nottingham, to those of Rev. W. R. Nicoll, of Kelso, has created no little stir in the minds of some of the readers of that well-known magazine. The cause of the change is stated by Dr. Cox himself in the December number to be entirely due to theological differences between the publishers (who are also the proprietors) and himself.

Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton are so well known, both as publishers and in private life, as men of staunch adherence to Evangelical principles, that to many it is no cause of surprise that they should have ceased to publish a magazine of such decidedly broad if not rationalistic tendency as The Expositor had become under the management of its late editor. Their action in the matter has been in every way courteous and considerate to Dr. Cox, and they have rendered a service to the cause of truth by the position they have taken, which demands frank and hearty recognition on the part of all who value sound and Scriptural teaching.

The two points on which the change made really turns are what is known as "the larger hope," and the authority of Holy Scripture as the inspired Word of God. The vital importance of these subjects makes their method of treatment in any theological journal a subject of great moment. The vague, indefinite, and indeterminate character of what is called "the larger hope" makes it a theory dangerous in the extreme, and the responsibility of its advocacy is a burden we marvel that any religious teacher can venture to accept. Its influence over the mind and heart of those who endorse it is admitted by Dr. Cox himself to be immense. He says of it, in relation to its advocates, that it works a revolution of thought and tone which must more or less clearly reveal itself in all they say. "And," he adds, "I am not surprised that as many as regard it as a baseless dream or a dangerous delusion, should recognise its influence on my writings and be offended at it."

Among criticisms passed upon the event in the pages of a contemporary, one writer says: "The publishers cannot surely know how wide and strong is the sympathy of ministers in all the churches with 'the larger hope,' and those catholic sentiments so ably expounded by our chief expositor." It is to be feared that this is true to a great extent, but all the more need is there for firm and faithful dealing in reference to it.

Under these circumstances we are glad that such a course has been taken by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton as they have pursued, and can only hope their new series under its new editorship will prove as firm and loyal to the interests of truth as their action leads us to expect. The programme of subjects for the new year ensures a decidedly high class of intellectual and spiritual pabulum for its readers, while the list of contributors includes some of the ablest and most thoroughly evangelical men of our day.

THE BOOK OF PSALMS.—2.

THE collection of all the poems comprised in Book I. is variously supposed to have been made by David himself, or soon after the accession of Solomon, or, again, in the time of Hezekiah. A striking characteristic of it is the prevailing use of the name Jehovah (or LORD, as we have it translated) for the Deity.

Book II. seems as if it was composed of two minor collections: the first containing Psalms xlii.—l., assigned in the superscriptions to the sons of Korah and Asaph: the second, Psalms li.—lxxii., to David. Of the latter, it is necessary to say that the allusions in many of its poems prove that they could not have been composed as early as the age in which David lived. The arrangement of Book II. is supposed by some writers to have been made with a special view to recitation in Solomon's Temple. Others assign the date of its compilation to the reign of Hezekiah; others, again, to the period of the Captivity. Its distinguishing features are (1) the historical nature of the superscriptions, and (2) the use of the name Elohim, or God, which name occurs five times as often as Jehovah.

Book III. Asaph, to whom eleven Psalms of the third collection are attributed, was a contemporary of David. Some of these poems, no doubt, are his, and the others may have been composed by "the sons of Asaph," or the members by hereditary descent of the choir Asaph founded. Thrupp believes this book was completed in the reign of Josiah. Other critics refer it to the return from Babylon. Its liturgical character is marked by the insertion of musical terms in the titles. The names Elohim and Jehovah are met with about equally.

Book IV. comprised Psalms composed up to the date of the Captivity, and collected for the service of the second temple. Most of its pieces are anonymous, the few exceptions being Moses' "prayer," Ps. xc., and David's Psalms ci., ciii.; also (according to the Septuagint) that incomparable Pastoral, Ps. civ.

The last book includes the Hallelujah Psalms, fifteen pilgrims' hymns, called Songs of Degrees, some of David's compositions, and liturgical pieces added when the five books were gathered into one. In the Alexandrine Version the prophets Haggai and Zechariah have the reputation of being the authors of Psalms cxlvi., cxlvii., and cxlviii.

Such, in epitome, is the history of the Psalter's gradual formation. By far its largest contributor, and one of its earliest, was David, whose influence pervades the whole. It is owing to this fact that the Book of Psalms in its entirety is popularly though incorrectly ascribed to him.

INSCRIPTIONS are attached to all but thirty-four of the Psalms. The antiquity and authority of these have been much questioned. It is seldom now believed that they are as old as the Psalms to which they are affixed. The fact of their insertion (though with some alteration) in the Alexandrine Version proves that they date at least as far back as 200 B.C. Some critics think they must be older still, as they were not perfectly intelligible to the Seventy, but this is otherwise explained by the translators' residence in Egypt. Probably the inscriptions are editorial notes. Their positions are three in number. To begin with the last in order:—

An instance of *sub*scription is to be seen in Ps. lxxii.: "The prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended."

Selah and Higgaion are words which are *inter*scribed. Selah occurs seventy-one times in the Book of Psalms. Occasionally it is found at the close of a poem, but more often marks off a section. It is supposed to give instruction for a pause in the music, or to mean Exalt the voice, or Exalt Jehovah, or Da Capo (repeat). Higgaion (see Ps. ix. 16) probably called for meditation on the words just sung: thus the same word in Ps. xcii. 4 is translated a "solemn sound," "Upon the harp with a solemn sound."

Varieties of *super*scriptions are more numerous. They give either (1) the author's name, (2) the historical occasion, (3) the style of poetry, (4) the liturgical use, (5) directions to the musician, (6) the instrument, or (7) the tune.

No. lx. is an instance of a Psalm with a long and full superscription. The tune to which Psalms lvii., lviii., lix., and lxxv. were to be sung is generally admitted to have been that belonging to a well-known Ode, beginning with Al-taschith, Destroy Thou not. Professor Robertson Smith says: "Of the song which gave the title Al-taschith, "Destroy not," a trace is still preserved in Isa. lxv. 8. "When the new wine is found in the cluster," says the prophet, men say "Destroy it not, for a blessing is in it." These words in the Hebrew have a distinct rhythm. They are the first line of one of the vintage songs so often alluded to in Scripture. And so we learn that the early religious melody of Israel had a popular origin, and was closely connected with the old joyous life of the nation. In the time when the last books of the Psalter were composed, the Temple music had passed into another phase, and had differentiated itself from the melodies of the people, just as we should no longer think of using as church music the popular airs to which Psalms and hymns were set in Scotland at the time of the Reformation."

We pass now to the consideration of the value of the Psalter, first, to the Jewish, and, secondly, to the Christian Church. As a book for devotional purposes it is unparalleled, and it was fitting that the national ballads of the Hebrew race, God's chosen race (even after its government had ceased to be a Theocracy), were sacred poems expressive of fervent love and adoration for Him to whom Israel owed all her greatness!

As a prophetical book the Psalter stands high. Prophecy was of progressive revelation. These Hebrew poets were men who led in part typical lives, their mention therefore of events in their own experience foretold often, though not invariably, the fuller life of their great Antitype. An illustration of this may be found in David's bearing during the vicissitudes of his early life; when exiled and persecuted because of the jealousy of Saul, he is sustained by his consciousness of innocence, his strong sense of personal dignity, and of Divine favour. "It is, in fact," says Canon Cook, "the consciousness of an election which marked David from youth onward as a type of the Messiah."

(To be concluded.)

PRAISEWORTHY EFFORT.—A friend writes:—A Sunday-school was founded in Holborough-road, Snodland, in 1854. The population having quadrupled in the interval, the teachers resolved upon the erection of a larger building with separate class-rooms. Funds were not forthcoming; so with such skilled labour as they could command, the work was commenced in the summer and completed in the autumn. After devoting their overtime to the enterprise they succeeded in providing accommodation for nearly 300 children of both sexes. A debt of more than £100 remains unpaid. Will some of the Lord's stewards send a little help to John Johnson, Superintendent and Treasurer, Providence Sunday-school, Snodland, near Rochester, Kent?

WHEN WILL THE LORD COME?

MARK xiii. 32, 35.

WILL He come in solemn midnight
When the world is wrapped in sleep?
While the Church of Christ is slumbering,
Only angels vigil keep?
Will He come when sorrow steepeth
Thousand hearts in thrilling woe?
When the power of sin is deepest,
Darkening every home below?
"Prepare your hearts, and make Him room,
At any time the Lord may come."

In the silent hour of dawning,
In the early morning watch.
Will He come with sudden splendour,
Thunder loud, and lightning flash?
Will He come while saints are watching,
All expectant for the sign,
When the clouds shall part asunder,
And reveal the Christ Divine?
"Prepare your hearts, and make Him room,
At any time the Lord may come."

Will he come when glorious morning
Floods the earth with blaze of light;
Every prospect fair adorning,
Will the Lord appear in sight?
Will He come while men ignore Him,
Asking o'er their hoarded gold,
"When the promise of his coming
All continues as of old."
"Prepare your hearts, and make Him room,
At any time the Lord may come."

Will He tarry till the evening,
When the shadows fall apace?
Will He turn their gloom to brightness
By the shining of his face?
Will He come while earth rejoices,
Gay with music, feast, and dance,
Singing with a thousand voices,
Heeding not the Lord's advance?
"Prepare your hearts, and make Him room,
At any time the Lord may come."

Will He come while war is slaying?
Will He come while mourners weep?
While ten thousand souls are praying,
Will the Lord his promise keep?
In the midnight, and the morning,
At the eventide and dawn,
Heed your Saviour's words of warning—
"Watch," he saith, "I quickly come."
"Prepare your hearts, and make Him room,
At any time the Lord may come."

THE BEDFORD INSTITUTE.

THE annual meeting of the Bedford Institute Home Mission Association was held at Devonshire House, Bishopsgate, on Friday, December 5, when there was a large gathering of friends and supporters of the Missions. Mr. J. Gurney Barclay occupied the chair.

The report expressed gratitude to God for manifest tokens of his goodness in the liberal pecuniary aid received and in blessing upon the work itself. In all the districts where the Missions are located—viz., Spitalfields, Bethnal Green, Ratcliff, Deptford, Clerkenwell, and Bunhill Fields—good and substantial work is being done in gathering souls to Christ, as well as in the social and moral elevation of the people. The Bedford Institute has just sent out one of its most earnest workers who came under training there in his boyhood, as a missionary to Madagascar, under the Friends' Foreign Mission Association.

At the Memorial Buildings, Bunhill Fields, an adult school for men is very successful. Interesting particulars of the work in this district were given by Mr. J. Allen Baker, and of work amongst women in all the districts by Miss Catlin. Earnest addresses followed by Mrs. H. S. Newman (Leominster), Mr. F. Sessions (Gloucester), and Mr. G. Gillett. Several of the speakers urged the need of more labourers.

In Memoriam.

MRS. HORATIUS BONAR.

THE beloved wife of the Rev. Dr. Horatius Bonar (and sister of the late Mary Lundie Duncan, the Memoir of whom has been so rich a source of blessing to many) passed away to be with Jesus on December 3, at 4 o'clock, after only a few days' illness. My dear mother was conscious throughout, and very much herself, full of interest in everything, and full of love to present and absent friends. But her heart was in heaven.

We had not told her she was dying, for we could not believe it ourselves; but she did not need to be told. "Don't be frightened, L——," she said, "if I say, 'Father, into Thy hands I commit my spirit.'" And again, "I feel as if I were just slipping away. I don't think I could feel different if I were going to die." And again, "Don't cry about me."

Near the beginning of her illness, she said to her husband, "Pray with me, for I am in sore trouble." But it was the only time that she seemed greatly distressed. Another time she said, "Am I trusting too much to my religious feelings? I am afraid I don't feel my sins enough." This was the nearest approach to anything like spiritual trouble, as if the very excess of her calm and confidence perplexed her for a moment. When reminded that it was Jesus in whom she was trusting, the shade passed.

Her son told her the text he had chosen for a little meeting: "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God." She fairly started with delight, and said, "How strange, that is the only text I have been able to fix in my mind all day!"

"Like Christ! Do you think I could ever be like Christ? How wonderful it will be!"

"He giveth me salvation! He giveth me —giveth me, salvation, salvation!" she repeated, lingering on each word as if the thought were too great to take in.

"I wonder whether Jesus will carry me all the way, or if He'll just come and meet me at the door. My precious Saviour, whom I have dishonoured so often."

"There now, I have got relief. Do you think it was an angel that helped me?"

She did pray for recovery; and once she said, after a good sleep: "I think the Lord has taken me in hand Himself, and is healing me. How good He is." She was full of thankfulness every time she thought herself a little better, and yet just as thankful and cheerful when it was not so. Either way seemed good to her.

"L—— has been reading me a nice praising Psalm, now read me another," she said one day, when suffering very much. There could be no gloom near her; she was so glad and contented, and so full of gratitude for everything done for her. When very weary, she asked me to repeat, "Come unto me, all ye that are weary and heavy laden." And again, she asked for "Calm me, my God, and keep me calm." Many times she asked for singing. Among others, "Though troubles assail," "Peace, perfect peace," "There are angels hovering round," were sung. "Jesus, Lover of my soul," was sung to her very near the end, and even then she joined in a feeble alto.

"Drop it softly," she said, to a dear friend who was repeating holy words to her; "say that over again, softer," she would say. "Then drops from heaven fell," she whispered two or three different times in such a satisfied voice, as if conscious of the peace being poured into her soul.

She often fancied she had seen her mother, or her children, lost long ago. While fully aware that this was only a fancy, she yet seemed to feel herself very near them.

She asked for her little grandchildren, and kissed each, with "Be a good baby," or, "Be a good boy; love Jesus; good bye," as simply as if they had only been going out for the day.

After talking a good deal, she sank into a sort of stupor during the last few hours. Yet she could be roused when spoken to. "Do you know me?" was sometimes asked. "To be sure I do," she would say, as if surprised at the question. She seemed as if composing herself for a night's rest. "Be quiet—hush—good-night," she would say when anyone stirred. "Very comfortable," she said once, in answer to a question. Then the pulse died away, imperceptibly, and without ever seeing death, she saw her Saviour.

She was one who in former times had greatly feared the act of dying. "It is terrible to die, and be laid in the grave," she used to say, with a shudder. "The only thing that reconciles me to it is that Jesus lay there." Only a few weeks ago she said: "I think there must be something fearful in the rending asunder of soul and body." Yet when the hour came, she not only never passed through the faintest shadow of the struggle she had dreaded, but the very thought of it never crossed her mind. So the Lord keeps his word: "He that keepeth my saying shall never see death."

I cannot forbear quoting the remark made by one who knew my mother in earlier days, at Kelso—all who knew her will recognise it as so true: "There was one marked feature in her character which I very greatly admired," says this friend; "that was the sweet grace of charity; when some might be speaking of the faults or failings of others, if she could not bring a direct contradiction, she was ever ready with 'Let us hope it is not true,' or some such expression." "I never heard her speak ill of anybody," said another. And it was true.

I must conclude by thanking the many, known and unknown to us, who have been bearing us up by prayer at this time. These prayers have indeed been not in vain. It would not be too much to write over our household—

"Peace, perfect peace: death shadowing us and ours;
Jesus has vanquished death, and all his powers."

UNITED KINGDOM BENEFICENT ASSOCIATION.—Miss Bullar, Basset Wood, Southampton, states that she intends to issue a serial in the interests of this institution three times a year, beginning in January next The title will be "Con Amore;" the subscription 1s. annually, post free; and the publisher, Mr. C. Caswell, 200, Broad-street, Birmingham.

SOUTHEND, ESSEX.—At a meeting held in the larger vestry-room of Trinity Church, Southend, on December 8, "The Christian Medical Mission" was duly organised for the benefit of the sick poor. A fully qualified physician and surgeon has placed his services gratuitously at the disposal of the Committee. A local chemist has been appointed, and has heartily entered into the proposed plan. A Council and Committee have also been elected. The honorary secretaries are Miss Jackson, New Milton Hall, and Mr. J. C. Ingram, 4, Marine-parade. Should the required funds be placed in the hands of the Committee, they will be glad to undertake the erection of a Cottage Hospital, so much needed in this growing neighbourhood. "The Christian Medical Mission" is entirely unsectarian, sickness and poverty being the chief recommendations which its patients can possess. Mr. T. M. Eastwood, 10, Prittlewell-square, has accepted the post of hon. treasurer.

UNBELIEF, AND HOW TO MEET IT.

ON this subject a Conference was lately held at Mildmay under the chairmanship of Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P. Great interest was shown in the proceedings. The Chairman began by expressing his conviction that mere controversy was less useful in meeting unbelief than the presentation of the truth in a positive form, and the exemplification of it in daily life. Unbelievers would be less ready to oppose Christianity if they saw that Christians acted up to their profession. Nevertheless, it was necessary that a Society like the Christian Evidence Society should be maintained in active operation, in order to meet those who do oppose the truth.

Rev. Dr. McCann thought that the best argument for Christianity was Christianity; nevertheless, there still remained a specific work to be done with reference to this matter. Secularism prevailed chiefly among the artisan classes, and was propagated among workshops. There was also a large number of persons who heard and read a good deal about agnosticism, about the supposed conflict between Physical Science and the Bible, and about the non-historic character of the Scriptures. It was most important to meet the difficulties of this class. This could be done by lectures on the positive truths of Christianity, meeting objections by the way. This had been done with considerable success.

Rev. Dr. Sinclair Paterson described the age as one of unsettledness. The advocates of unbelief made unfair statements, and presumed upon the ignorance of their readers or hearers, who did not know that ample evidence existed for the truth of what was impugned. We were lacking in our duty if fallacies and falsehoods were not exposed. As an aid to the ministry of the Gospel, the work of the Christian Evidence Society was, at the present time, absolutely necessary.

Mr. W. Barnard, one of the lecturers of the Society, expressed his conviction that while infidels of the last century rejected Atheism, to-day it was advocated at the corners of the streets in a most aggressive form. The difficulties presented by sceptics were not sufficiently dealt with. In every place where the agents of the Society had gone—in the highways and byeways—they had won the sympathies of the majority of the working men, who listened attentively for an hour or two hours, even in the rain, while the reasons for Christianity were presented, and the fallacies of Infidelity were exposed. His experience was that nothing was lost while much was gained by discussion, and that the advocacy of Christian Evidences had acted most beneficially, and not prejudicially, wherever it had been intelligently and fairly prosecuted.

Mr. C. F. Dowsett recommended private lectures in drawing and other large rooms, with admission by invitation ticket.

Rev. T. T. Waterman (the Secretary) briefly described the work of the Society, referring particularly to the formation of classes for the study of Christian Evidences, to the distribution of tracts, and to correspondence with doubters and unbelievers.

Mrs. Ashworth gave an account of what the agents of the Society had done in the immediate neighbourhood, commending their tact, ability, and devout earnestness.

SURGICAL AID SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of the supporters and subscribers of this Society, which was established in 1862, for the supply of mechanical supports to the afflicted poor, was lately held at Cannon-street Hotel, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor. His Lordship spoke in strong terms of the importance of the Society's work, and suggested that they should ask the help of the City Companies. The Secretary read the report, which stated that 6357 patients had been relieved during the year, including 1946 men, 2585 women, and 826 children. 8101 surgical appliances had been supplied during the past twelve months. The loan of air and water beds, invalid couches, &c., had received considerable attention, no less than 138 patients having been assisted in this way during the year. 487 grants had been made to urgent cases, and those requiring costly instruments.

HUMPY DICK.

By JAMES BOWKER.

IF there was one lad in Manchester better known than another, that lad was Humpy Dick. He was a mere child, it is true, but, like thousands of children in the great Cotton City, he had to begin to work for his daily bread long before the little limbs were strong enough for the morning and evening tramp over the weary pavements, and before the weak little back was strong enough to bear the burden.

His occupation had brought him into contact with the streams of business men flowing and ebbing like a sea of life through the main streets—sharp, eager men, intent upon business most of them, but with a tender heart beneath the oft rugged exterior, and with a kindly, sympathetic look in the keen eyes. He was a flower-seller in spring and summer, a match-seller in the winter, that was all. It was, perhaps, due only to his poor little hump-back, and to his pinched, pallid face, that he was not chased away from the corner of one of the busy cross streets, as a beggar and an outcast; for at times the basket he held was but poorly furnished, and the shrill voice was scarcely audible as he addressed a stray passer-by. There was something, however, in the pitiful deformity, and in the piteous glance of the sunken eyes, that appealed to the stern policemen, who generally managed to seem to ignore his presence upon the causeway as they passed by; and simple as were the contents of the basket Dick held upon his feeble arm, many and many a message they whispered to the men who, in their chase after gold, "choked with cares and riches," scarcely had time to glance at the waif who stood there, so unfitted to do battle in the struggle of life.

MATCH SELLERS.

During the early months of the year pallid primroses, gathered far away from the smoke and dim light of the city, and later on cowslips and bluebells, sent out from the lad's basket their sweet perfume, suggestive of distant hedgerows and coppices, greening under the influence of the spring. As these were nature's wildings, and cost nothing but the long walk into the country, and the trouble of gathering, Dick had a plentiful supply of them day by day, but in the late summer oftentimes a few bunches of wall-flowers were all that the child had to sell. The "gillivers," however, as the people named them, called up in many a weary man's mind a realistic picture of the old cottage garden at home, years before, with its old-fashioned hollyhocks and southern-wood and lavender, and with the vision came a sweet and softening memory of the little bed-room, with its diamond-paned window overlooking the trim paths burdened with sea-pink. The roar and bustle of the Manchester streets were stilled for a moment, and the loved sound of the dead mother's voice took its place, perhaps for a minute only, but sufficiently long to soften into tenderness men, unfortunately for themselves, unused to such moods.

One day, when the basket contained nothing more than a few bunches of "gillivers," such a message touched the heart of a burly-looking man who was hurrying to the Exchange from his train. It was only a matter of a moment, but he saw himself again a child at his mother's knee—the mother who had for so long been sleeping in the quiet country churchyard; and he felt the soft hand laid caressingly upon his head, as he whispered after her the child's prayers at bed-time, the red sun having set in the west, and the hush and the mystery of the gloaming, "th' edge o' dark," as his mother called it, over all. With unaccustomed tears in his eyes, he stopped opposite Dick, and said briefly, but in a soft voice—

"How much, little chap?"

"Nobbut a ha'-penny," Dick replied apologetically, as he looked at the simple flowers, and, lifting up a small bunch, held it out towards the purchaser.

"Nay, lad," said the man, "I don't want so many, a bit for mi' coat, that's enough;" and taking a spray of the wallflower, he placed it in a button-hole, and then added, half to the lad, and half as though in a soliloquy, "It was mi' mother's favourite flower."

"And it was my mother's too," the hunchback whispered, with a sad look in his eager eyes.

"Was it, now?" the man answered softly; and then after a pause he added, "Why does ta' say 'it was'? Is she dead?"

"Aye," said the child in a quavering voice, "two years, sir. Consumption they said it was, an' starvin' browt it on, for she was poorly a long while, an' not able to work; an' I couldn't do mich to help her, an' so she died. I mind th' day she died. There was nobody but me in th' room, an' when she'd done coughing she took me in her arms an' she kissed me, an' said, 'Dick, I'm goin' to die, an' if it wasn't for leavin' thee I should be fain, for I'm goin' where there's no hunger or thirst, an' where no candle's wantit, for the Lord is the light thereof. Promise me to be a good lad, an' to grow up good, an' to do what's right an' honest, an' to come to me up in heaven some day, for I shall be looking out for tha' to come. An' when I promist her she went very quiet, and I thowt she was asleep, an' I didn't stir till it got dark, an' then when I cried because I couldn't waken her, th' folks came upstairs an' said she were dead, an' took me away."

"Poor little chap!" the listener said softly; "she is where there is no dying of hunger;" then he added, "And what became of thee after?"

"Him an' his wife as owned th' house where my mother an' me had a room, said I could stop with their lads if I liked till I could make mi' own living working at a mill," the little fellow answered. "'It will only be like feeding a sparrow or two,'" he said; "and his wife said, 'Feedin' or no feedin', we can't turn th' little mite adrift. When we've anything to eat, Dick can have some of it; and when there isn't it will be better for him to starve with us than by hisself.' So I've been there two years now," the child added, "and when I get any money I give it to her, and when I don't get any she always says,' Cheer up, Dick, nobody can do better than his best.' He's out of work now," he added, after a pause.

"What does he do, the lads' father?" the man asked.

"He's a stonemason," the child replied, "but he finds it hard to get work, for he's not a strong chap."

"He's a grand fellow," the man said, "and I must see if I can do anything for him." And then, after he had given the child a few coppers, he hurried on towards the Exchange.

In the hurry and excitement of 'Change Mr. Gregson quite forgot the little hunchback and his pathetic story, but in the evening, after dinner, as he was seated comfortably before his dining-room fire, the light flickering over the lovely landscapes hanging upon the walls, and upon the luxurious furniture, his thoughts went back to the pallid face and eager eyes of the mite with whom he had conversed at the street corner. A strange feeling took possession of him as he gazed round upon his rich surroundings, and thought of the poor widow dying in the lonely upper room of the cottage in one of the dingy back courts, leaving her deformed little child to the mercy of the streets. "That stonemason is a nobler man than I am," he said to himself, "for he has got the mind and spirit of Christ. 'Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto Me,'" he whispered musingly. "In this huge city there are thousands like me, with rich furniture, and paintings, and books, and everything lovely and costly around us; now and again we give of our superfluity a few sovereigns to this or to that charity, but we keep back the kind and loving word, and allow the good impulses that spring up in our hearts to die down again flowerless and fruitless day by day for want of a little nurture. We well may pray to be forgiven our sins of omission when we think of the loving and noble deeds done by the poor ones of the earth, unseen save by the ministering angels of God—deeds like that of the mason Dick told me about; out of work half their time, and with not much to live upon at the best, and yet with sufficient love in their hearts to take in another one to feed and to clothe."

Musing thus, he turned to his wife, who was reading at the other side of the fireplace, and who had learned not to disturb him in what she thought were his business reveries.

"Lizzie," he said, "I heard a sad story to-day from a little chap who stands with gillivers at a corner in Market-street—a little hump-backed fellow with a pale face and eager-looking eyes—how his mother died of consumption and starvation, leaving him to the streets for anything she knew, and how some poor folks, with hardly a bite for themselves, took him in as one of their own; and I am blaming myself that I didn't go and see after them at once, for they are God's poor, that's evident. If I knew where they lived I would go now, late as it is, for I feel as if I had left a duty undone, but my business to-day took them quite out of my mind."

"Find out to-morrow where they live," Mrs. Gregson said, "and I will go and look after them on Thursday. A day will not make much difference."

Mrs. Gregson was a kind-hearted woman, but she was a little thoughtless. To the poor a day often means another twenty-four hours of starvation and sickness in lonely, cheerless garrets, another twelve hours' weary tramp in search of a few pence wherewith to purchase the dry bread for the loved wife and children dying of hunger in the midst of a nation's wealth and luxury.

Next morning, when Mr. Gregson reached the corner where Humpy Dick usually stood to his surprise the place was vacant; so strongly had he been impressed by his meditations and reflections of the previous evening that a feeling of remorse took possession of him as he walked away, and at noon he could not resist an impulse to go and see if the lad had arrived later than was customary with him. The corner was still unoccupied, however, and in the evening, as he went back to the station at the close of the day's work, it was the same.

After dinner he could not get the little fellow's pallid face and eager eyes out of his mind; they came between him and the lovely works of art on the walls of his room, and he bitterly regretted not having taken some prompt measures immediately after he had listened to the lad's story. "If I am spared until to-morrow," he said, "I will find him if he is to be found in Manchester," and the strong resolve gave him some relief from the feeling something akin to remorse which had haunted him so many hours.

The following day again the little hunchback was not in his old place as the merchant passed along the crowded street, so at noon Mr. Gregson inquired from the police if anything was known where Dick came from. None of them knew anything more, however, than that he came along Deansgate, and that he seemed to be always alone. They had not heard of any street accident, they said, and the remark sent Mr. Gregson off to the hospitals to pursue his inquiries; but when the night fell, he had not found any trace whatever of the lad whom he both longed and half dreaded to find, and he went home to dinner very sad and disappointed.

A few days passed, and he seemed to be no nearer his object, and as he was expressing to his wife a fear that he might not succeed in finding the little hunchback, Mrs. Gregson said suddenly, "Why not advertise for him? No doubt some district visitor or minister would be able to tell something about the family he has been living with."

"That's it!" Mr. Gregson replied, heartily, "I wonder I didn't think of that before; somebody is certain to know his whereabouts. I'll go now and get an advertisement in the Examiner," and off he went at once, for his few days' experience had taught him not to procrastinate.

The following morning the paper had a singular advertisement, in which information was asked for as to the lad who so long had stood at a corner in Market-street, selling flowers or matches; and that evening when he reached home Mr. Gregson found a letter from a visitor who had the stonemason's family in her district.

A few hours afterwards the merchant and his wife might have been seen threading their way through the dimly-lighted and cheerless-looking streets of one of the most destitute portions of the city. The rain had been falling all day, and a clinging mist shrouded everything in its chilly folds. Only the gin-shops and drink palaces looked bright and warm, with their swing doors temptingly half open, and, perhaps for the first time in his life, Mr. Gregson comprehended the secret of at least half of the power of the drink curse; the warmth and light of the public-house, as compared with the squalor and biting cold and darkness of the garret and the cellar in the city slums.

The pair hesitated to enter a court, over which was painted "Founder's-yard," and yet it was the place they were in search of. The ministers and district visitors, the parish doctors and the police could have told them to enter without fear, for the houses in the yard were occupied not by the criminal or the vicious, but solely by the suffering poor. Much heroic endurance, and many an act of noble Christian self-sacrifice, had been witnessed there by the angels.

"This is the place, 'Founder's-yard,'" said Mr. Gregson, "and there is a light in the first house. Let us go there." It was only a dim light from a candle, but it looked cheery in comparison with the dreary surroundings, and as the visitors approached the window its faint rays enabled them to see a family group seated around the fireplace, a group evidently consisting of the stonemason and his wife and their two lads.

"Humpy Dick is not there," Mr. Gregson whispered in a trembling voice; "something has happened to him. Let us ask for him."

As they stepped into the passage, however, they both instinctively paused, for they could hear the stonemason speaking.

"It seems strange," he said, "to be without little Dick, and I cannot get him out mi' mind wi' his empty chair there before me. But he's better where he is, for he won't know what it is to be hungry or cold there, and he would have known it again here, for mi' work come to end again to-day, an' I don't know where to look for another job, things are so bad."

"He's dead!" said Mr. Gregson, grasping his wife's arm, and without waiting longer he knocked at the room door.

It was promptly opened by one of the lads, who stood on one side as, in response to his mother's invitation, the visitors entered.

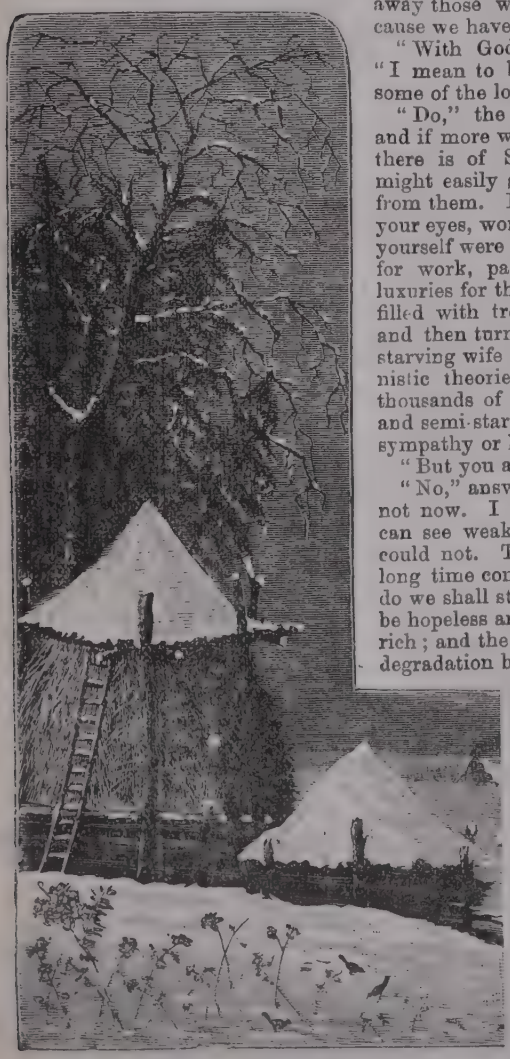
"I missed little Dick from his usual corner," Mr. Gregson explained, "and I was afraid that something had happened to him, so we found out where you lived and came to ask about him.'

"Not many folks finds this court," said the mason, a weary-looking man with a gentle-looking face; "it isn't much of a place for visitors, but a few do come—God bless them—and they leave sunshine behind them even here." And then, after a short pause, he added: "The little fellow has been taken to the children's hospital this morning, for he was in a slow fever through gettin' wet. The doctor said he would do better there, and get everything he wants; so we let him go, though we didn't like partin' with him; he's such nice ways, and he's nobody but us to look to."

"I'm glad it is not worse than that," Mr. Gregson said. "I was afraid he had met with an accident in the street; that he had been run over, or something. What hospital is he in?"

"Coniston-street," the man replied. "A fine place it is."

"We will go and see him to-morrow," Mrs. Gregson answered; "we may be able to do something for him even there."



"THE SNOW LAY IN ITS VIRGIN WHITENESS."

"You're the gentleman he had a long talk to about his mother, are you?" the woman asked, addressing Mr. Gregson. "He was telling us about your buying some gillivers off him."

"Yes," was the reply; "and he told me about your kindness in taking him into your family. It was noble of you."

"I don't know whether it was that or not," the man said, softly; "we didn't think about it that way. It was what Christ would have done. We've not much else but a cup of water to give, us working folks not always in work, but we can give that, and the world would be better than it is if we always did give it. A shake of the hand is not of much account, but I sometimes feel, when I go to my work through the crowded streets, that life would seem less lonely to me, and my lot lighter, if one of the folks I met, a rich man or a poor man, no matter which, said, 'Here's another man for whom my Saviour lived and died,' and then without more ado, held out his hand and shook mine. I don't envy the rich people their wealth, though sometimes a few shillings down here would mean health and strength, but I often long for a little of their kindness. They're not without their sorrows and th ir troubles, the well-to-do people, and it might bring us a little nearer to one another if they remembered sometimes that we have the same griefs and the same burdens to bear, and that if death comes into their comfortable homes and takes away their loved ones, it comes too into our lonesome garrets, and carries away those who perhaps are loved all the more because we have so few about us to love."

"With God's help," said Mr. Gregson solemnly, "I mean to bear it in mind in future, and to lighten some of the loads and burdens of the lowly."

"Do," the stonemason answered frankly. "Do; and if more would do so there would be less talk than there is of Socialism and Communism. The rich might easily give that which some day may be taken from them. If you were to see your wife dying before your eyes, worn out by watching and hunger, and you yourself were tramping day after day in a vain search for work, passing mile after mile of shops full of luxuries for the wealthy, and mile after mile of houses filled with treasures of art and with every comfort, and then turning again into the fireless room to the starving wife and little ones, some of these Communistic theories would catch you too as they catch thousands of those whose daily lives are full of toil and semi-starvation, and often without even a ray of sympathy or love."

"But you are not a Socialist?" Mr. Gregson said.

"No," answered the man, with a sad smile. "No, not now. I was when I was younger, but to-day I can see weaknesses and impossibilities where once I could not. The rule and kingdom of Christ are a long time coming, but they will come, and when they do we shall still have rich and poor, but they will not be hopeless and helpless poor, and selfish and careless rich; and the help of the rich will be accepted without degradation by the poor, because the mind and spirit of Jesus will have prompted it. Sympathising help, and not patronising charity, is what the poor want. Jesus didn't throw a penny to the leper, but touched him, and that touch not only healed the leper, but it has saved many of us from disbelieving the Christ."

There was silence for a while, and then Mr. Gregson and his wife rose to leave, and after a friendly parting, the man accompanying them to the end of the court, they started homeward.

"I begin to see why God has given us wealth," Mrs. Gregson said, as they stepped along the sloppy pavement; "not that we might spend it all on our own enjoyments, but that we might even of our superfluity help others."

"Yes," her husband replied, "to help others, 'God's poor,' as we often call them, perhaps in the same spirit as that in which Cain asked, 'Am I my brother's keeper?' 'God's poor,' not 'my poor;'" and the tears welled up into his eyes as he spoke; "and yet they are here in our midst—tramping over the same flags, loving their little ones as we love ours, and burying their dead in the same God's Acre. Kings and priests many of them, brothers and sisters of the Lord Jesus, according to the definition of Christ Himself, because they go about doing the will of his Father which is in heaven; but, because they wear only labouring folks' clothes, we can't afford to know them."

"You are blaming yourself too bitterly," said his wife; "the best way will be to make up in the future for the neglect and thoughtlessness of the past. We shall not have to go far to find a sorrow to assuage and a burden to lighten."

The next day Humpy Dick had two visitors, who found him, even in his sickness, enjoying the warmth and comfort of the hospital, and his enjoyment was a revelation to them. What a startling testimony it is to the bitterness of the life of the poor, to find big men and women, as well as little children, looking forward with dread to the return of health, because that implies a return to the cold, stony streets, or at best to the fireless cellar or garret. We have our Hospital Sunday, it is true, but do we remember on that day that, to many a poor creature in pain and sickness, the fact of being under a roof with a few meals sure, and with warmth and comfort, makes each day passed in the hospital a Sunday?

"He is not very bad," the doctor said, "and a few weeks here will set him up. He's been getting wet day after day, and not eating enough, like hundreds of children in this city, toiling for a livelihood in the streets, almost before their little bones have hardened. But fortunately for him he has been brought here, whereas hundreds of them die in the slums and courts, and never enjoy a few weeks' comfort and care, even in a hospital. 'Surplus population,' we term them in our Parliamentary debates," he added, bitterly; "but over their nettle-covered graves the words are written in flame: 'It is not the will of your Father in heaven that one of these little ones should perish.'"

When Mr. and Mrs. Gregson left the hospital, the institution was richer by a comfortable cheque, and many a sick body and weary heart participated in the benefit for long afterwards, Humpy Dick amongst the number, for his recovery was more tedious than the doctor had anticipated.

It was at Christmas time when he came out of the hospital, but he had no dread before him of the daily tramp through the streets, for Mr. Gregson had told him that he meant to have him sent to school, and to find him work when he had become a bit of a scholar; and it was not to "Founder's-yard" he had to go when the hospital door closed upon him, for Mr. Gregson had also seen the stonemason and his family removed to a cosy little cottage in the suburbs, a cottage with a tiny garden in front and the wide open fields behind, over which the sweet winds blew, and where the snow lay in its virgin whiteness, unsullied by the smoke and soot of the city.

"I can give you constant work at the mill, and you can pay me back when you are able," he had said to the stonemason, and the service was accepted as it was tendered, in the mind and spirit of the Master, both parties to it being the better for it.

A few years afterwards, if you had seen Humpy Dick, you would not have recognised him as the little weakling with the basket of gillivers, for he had grown strong and hearty, and the hungry look had left his eyes, and he walked along like a lad with work to do, and who meant to do it as well as it could be done. In the stonemason's family, too, there was comfort, for the bread-winner had almost lost the recollection of what it was to be "out of work;" and every night, when the family gathered together in prayer, the angels carried up to the Throne a petition for a blessing upon the two who had been the Lord's stewards.

"I have more reason to be grateful to him than he has to be grateful to me," said Mr. Gregson, humbly, "for it was not until I met with him down in Founder's-yard that my faith blossomed into works."

THE REJECTED GUIDE.*

BY REV. E. P. HAMMOND.

IT SEEMS STRANGE TO ME THAT WHEN CHRIST HAS DONE SO MUCH FOR US, THERE SHOULD BE ANY WHO DO NOT LOVE HIM. An anxious little girl among the enquirers in Dundee, in Scotland, where the holy Robert McCheyne was so dearly loved by the children, said in an enquiry-meeting that her heart was so wicked she could not love the Saviour. She seemed to feel her sins to be very great, but declared she could not love Jesus. As she appeared to have learned that she needed an entirely "new heart," and not a "better heart," we began to tell her more about what Christ had done for lost sinners. In a few moments she looked up with a happy smile, saying—

"I CAN'T HELP LOVING HIM. OH, I WONDER I NEVER LOVED HIM BEFORE, WHEN HE LOVED ME SO MUCH AS TO BE WILLING TO SUFFER DEATH FOR ME."

Why, if an earthly friend had done half as much for you as has this One, who so "well deserves the name of Friend," I am sure you would not be so ungrateful as not to love Him in return.

This reminds me of a touching story about a party who determined to climb to the top of Mount Washington, more than six thousand feet high. But they rejected THE GUIDE. Just as this party of ladies and gentlemen were leaving the hotel at the foot of Mount Washington, the proprietor urged them to take one of his guides.

"We do not wish a guide," they said. "We are determined to find our own way to the 'Tip-top House.'"

"But," said he, "I will let you have one for half price."

"No: we do not want one, even at half price. We can find our way well enough alone. We will follow the path, and so will soon find our way to the hotel at the top of the mountain, and there we shall get a good supper and all we need."

"But you may get lost," said the hotel-keeper, "without a guide; rather than have you go alone, I will send with you, all the way, a good faithful guide for nothing."

"No, we won't have him, even for nothing; we want to do something that will astonish our friends."

"But it is very dangerous."

"We are strong, and will risk it."

"Suppose you find yourselves in a snow-storm, what would the ladies do?"

One of them laughed, and said, "That would be very nice. A snowstorm in summer; I hope we shall see one."

"Yes, yes!" they shouted; "then we will roll up some snowballs, and see them go rushing down the mountain side till they become small avalanches."

And so, with hearts full of hope, they started off for the top of Mount Washington. On they went, gay as larks, for a few miles, till they got near the top, and they saw a white cloud above them. Up, up they went into it. They found what I have often seen in Switzerland, a snow-storm among the mountains, while the sun was pouring its warm rays upon the people in the valley below.

"Isn't this fun?" said one and another. And so it was for a short time; but after a while the snow became so deep they could not see the path. Ah! then the "fun" was at an end, and they began to think of the warning words of the proprietor of the hotel, who offered them a guide.

"Oh! how I wish we had that guide now!" said one.

"But it's too late to go back for him; we must find our way alone," said another. And so they struggled on, sometimes going quite out of the way.

Darkness came, and they were LOST! LOST in the deep snow! But they kept moving upward as well as they could. The two ladies got so tired they could not walk another step. It was dreadfully cold, and so they sank down in the deep, cold snow, and waited for daylight to come to show them the way to the "Tip-top House." In the morning the storm had all cleared away, and as the keepers of that house looked out, they saw only a little way off, not much more than a stone's throw, the half-buried party. They went to them at once, but it was too late to save the life of one beautiful young lady, who had been frozen to death during that awful night, and all because she, with the rest, had said, "We don't want the guide."

When I was at the top of Mount Washington, a few summers ago, I saw a great pile of stones, which had been thrown together over the spot where this young lady was found, cold in death.

How foolish they were not to accept the guide. But suppose they had taken him, and he had lost his life just as he had got them all safe in the warm hotel, how would the party have felt toward him? Jesus, who is "the child's Guide to heaven," had to die a dreadful death on the Cross, before He could lead sinful children to heaven. Yes, my dear little friend, He died so that God might forgive you all your sins.

And now he is ready to take you with Him all through the journey of life, safely home to the Golden City.

WORKING LADS' INSTITUTE, WHITECHAPEL.

THE eighth annual meeting of this institute was held on Wednesday, December 10, at the Hanbury-street Schools. The weather was unfavourable, but no lack of interest or satisfaction was discernible in those who attended.

Mr. Henry Hill, Hon. Secretary, read the Report, which was full of encouraging facts relative to the progress of the work. Allusion was made to the library, from which a thousand volumes had been issued. Many are now worn out, but funds do not permit of their being replaced at present. Many hindrances had arisen in reference to the new building, by which its progress has been delayed. Mr. Hill is enthusiastic enough, however, to believe that if the necessary funds are speedily realised, a really model Institute for Working Lads will ere long be completed, and that by about midsummer the work may be sufficiently advanced to have an opening. A sale of work is to be held in April next, toward which all kinds of articles in the way of plants, flowers, provisions, stationery, wearing apparel, books, &c., may be contributed. £5000 is the remaining sum needed for the new building.

One great event of the evening was the distribution of prizes to lads for swimming, and of certificates declaring them to be qualified to render first aid to the injured, presented by the St. John's Ambulance Association. Addresses were thereafter delivered by Rev. J. Fletcher (who presided), Mr. T. E. Minshall, Mr. A. McCreath, Dr. Hamilton, Mr. J. J. Jones, and Mr. Hill.

STRATFORD CONFERENCE HALL.—The Stratford friends are purposing formally to open the new Conference Hall and Y.M.C.A., in West Hamlane, on January 23, the anniversary of the commencement of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Mission there. They greatly desire to inaugurate the work of the new hall free of debt; at present there is a deficit of over £2000 on the cost of building and furnishing. Mr. Burnett Tabrum, Chairman of the Committee, 40, Borough, S.E., will thankfully receive help towards this object.

LONDON CHURCH MISSION.

WHITECHAPEL PARISH CHURCH.

THE addresses delivered at the early services by Rev. J. Gurney Hoare were most helpful. They were short and pointed, and everyone could take away the thought so clearly enunciated. At one o'clock a goodly number gathered to hear addresses from the outside pulpit in the churchyard—wayfarers on life's highway, who, out of curiosity or interest, stopped to pick up some crumbs of the Bread of Life as they passed to or from their mid-day meal. It has been estimated that on the average 200 men listened each day to the message so powerfully proclaimed. Not only was the attendance good, but the behaviour of the very motley crowd was quiet and reverent.

The afternoon Bible readings were quite an experiment, but proved most successful and helpful. Many came time after time to hear the grand fundamental doctrines of Christianity quietly and clearly explained. To enable mothers to attend these special meetings their children were lodged pro tem. in the church room, which was converted into an impromptu crèche, presided over by nursing ladies, who were amply provided with all sorts and conditions of feeding and entertaining apparati for their little charges.

The services for children were addressed by Rev. H. E. Fox and Mr. H. Hutchinson. The little ones were kept interested the whole time, and the glorious Gospel showed its adaptability to children's minds.

The powerful and earnest appeals at the evening services, combining so much instruction with them, were listened to with the utmost attention. We are thankful to say that hundreds of the poorest of the poor attended. The Mission has contradicted the common notion that the very poor will not go to church. Only make them welcome; have bright services; plain, earnest Gospel sermons; and it is as true as it was 1800 years ago, the "common people" will hear "the glad tidings" gladly. The after-meetings were well attended, many were spoken to and helped in various ways, and many others who did not stay to them were impressed.

The Mission to the Jews was carried on in a different way, and at present we are not able to tabulate results. We can, however, rest in the assurance that God's Word will never return unto Him void. In this peculiar and difficult work the Rev. J. H. Brühl and the Rev. A. Bernstein took the chief part; they were assisted in the singing by several young men from Palestine-place.

STEPNEY PARISH CHURCH.

Most of the addresses in the Parish Church were given by Rev. F. J. Chavasse, the principal missioner. His wise, loving counsels, clear, simple expositions, and his earnest, eloquent appeals will not easily be forgotten. We shrink from even appearing to estimate results, but the large congregations, the quiet and solemn tone, the deep impression which seemed to be left on many hearts, will long remain in the memory of all who were present.

In addition to the services conducted by Mr. Chavasse, we had meetings for women, conducted by Mrs. Homan, at the Grosvenor Hall. We fully believe that many amongst them will be found to have resolved by God's help to lead a new life of service for Him. At the closing service for women, held in the church, there must have been more than 400 present, out of whom nearly 200 applied for memorial cards. The meetings for men, held at 9 o'clock in the schools, under the superintendence of Rev. John Shaw, were also most satisfactory. There was a large attendance every night, and the men who came were of just the sort whom we desired to reach. Nor must we omit to mention the men's services on Sunday afternoons, which were largely attended; nor the Beaumont Hall service on Sunday evenings, at which a genuine working-class congregation seems almost habitually together.

In order to give mothers, burdened with children, an opportunity of attending these meetings in peace and quiet, an adjoining room was set apart for the reception of the babies, and as many as fourteen or fifteen little ones were present at one time, under the charge of the helpers who so kindly undertook this service.

All the services were largely recruited by the efforts of the Open-air Mission, the members of which, headed by the clergy, went through most of the streets near the church and gave invitations to the services and meetings. In this department especially, and in every other part of the Mission, we were greatly aided by the Rev. Cyril Hubbard and many lay-helpers.

Special services were held by our missioner during the week in workshops and factories throughout the parish, and we believe that these efforts contributed not a little towards swelling the number of attendants at the men's meetings.

More than 500 memorial cards were distributed to persons who, by their application, testified that they desired to keep a memorial of the benefit which they had received, and more than a hundred women and eighty men gave in their names to attend classes for instruction after the Mission. It cannot but be acknowledged by the most sceptical that the Mission has produced a great influence not only upon the congregation, but upon many who have never been accustomed to attend religious services or engage in any sort of worship. We must all recognise that in the results already gained there is an urgent call for prompt and eager action, in order that the impressions now made may not be allowed to die away.

ST. PHILIP, CLERKENWELL.

The Missioner here, Rev. Cyril Grant, vicar of Aylesford, preached with great earnestness and spiritual power. The interest was well sustained throughout. There were many inquirers, and a great many requests for prayer, some of which have already been signally answered.

Some friends from the West-end did good service as workers. Every night a band of working men went out into the streets and lanes, singing to and inviting the people.

RAM'S EPISCOPAL CHAPEL, HOMERTON, E.

The services here were attended by many of the poor people in the district, and by the great majority of the congregation also. Many came forward to help in visiting the poor, in distributing tracts, and inviting the careless to the house of God; and with marked result. Many have said they derived great spiritual benefit from the Mission. Not a few profess to have found Christ, and to have given themselves to his service. The missioner, Rev. Canon Scott, of New Seaham, Sunderland, whose memory we shall cherish with gratitude and affection for his unwearied efforts, expressed himself as delighted with the admirable working of the district, and with the successful issue of the efforts made.

ST. SAVIOUR'S, POPLAR, E.

The Mission at this church was conducted by Rev. Daniel Evans, rector of Llan Maes, South Wales, and Rev. H. B. Barnes, vicar of Ilford. Addresses were given to women on six of the days at 2.40 p.m., which were always well attended. The children's services were a great feature in the Mission: they were held on week-days at a quarter to five; not only the children of the parochial schools, but those from the neighbouring Board schools, came in great numbers. The services for men only, on Sunday afternoons, attracted a large number of working men, who listened with the deepest attention to the clear and practical addresses of the head Missioner.

The chief services were held at 7 p.m. on Sunday, and 8 p.m. on other days. The congregations improved from day to day. Perhaps the two most satisfactory features of the Mission were: first, that owing to the very retired position of the church the large congregations were composed entirely of the poor of the parish itself; and next, that the work of visiting, &c., for six weeks before, and during the Mission, was carried out very thoroughly with little help from outside, by working people connected with the church. Many of these have since offered to continue the work which they have found to be so interesting. Thus there seems to be every reason to hope that the effect will not easily die out.

ALLHALLOWS, BROMLEY, E.

This Mission was very satisfactory, not so much as to numbers as effective results. The chief benefits fell upon backsliders and weak Christians, with a special "time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord" for his own people. Desperate efforts were made by a band of forty visitors to reach every family in the poor parish. Nearly 40,000 tracts and leaflets were circulated. The curate and Mr. Spall Smith went street-preaching every evening before the regular service. There were also special services for men and women, and children. Almost all the hands at the match factory of Messrs. Pau & Sons were collected in the large parish room. The services were well attended, and the congregation most attentive. The missioner, Rev. W. H. Ullmann, late of Sydney, delivered, with most intense earnestness, the message of salvation. Altogether, the Mission was a real and substantial success.

HOMES OF HOPE.

AMONG the many Christian enterprises which commend themselves to the practical sympathy of Christian philanthropists are the Homes of Hope, Regent-square. This charity, which has so long opened its doors to receive the most pitiable as well as the most hopeful class of poor betrayed girls and young women seeking to be saved from the lowest depths of moral impurity, is now, we regret to find, in very straitened circumstances for the want of funds to carry on the benevolent work. The applications for admission are very numerous, and urged with an importunity often very distressing to listen to.

The Committee have studied to relieve cases very frequently overlooked by other institutions, namely, young girls who have been betrayed into their first offence; and who, though in some cases having to support young infants, are struggling hard to keep out of the sinful and cruel vortex of an openly immoral career.

In time past many have successfully passed through the Homes of Hope whose lives are now the exemplification of gratitude and virtuous living. Here are a few instances in brief from the records of the Homes:—

W. A. was only fourteen years of age when she was forcibly violated by her employer; her life was despaired of for some time, and it was only after she had become a mother that her health was so far restored as to enable her to gain her own livelihood again. Happily she is now doing well.

P. W., another mere child, was only fifteen years of age when she was admitted—taken from immoral surroundings, where she had been contaminated by a bad companion. She had, unhappily, been neglected by her parents. She is now restored again.

W. E., the daughter of highly-respectable parents, was betrayed into sin by her affianced suitor; when disgraced she was deserted by him, as well as forsaken by all her friends for her sin and folly; she, too, is now again restored to the path of virtue.

The cases most conspicuous in the Homes of Hope are mostly those of young girls who come from the ranks of the better classes.

As the winter sets in the applications for admission become more numerous, and the Committee fear that unless the benevolence of Christians is exercised on behalf of these Homes many unhappy suppliants will have to be turned from the doors, as funds are now entirely exhausted. We commend, with all the earnestness that we can express, the work of the Homes of Hope to the prayers and practical sympathy of our readers.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE Y.M.C.A.

THE new premises of the Young Men's Christian Association, Newcastle-on-Tyne, were opened on Friday, December 5, under the most auspicious circumstances. The Association is to be congratulated on being now in the possession of a home which, in its features of architecture, adaptability of structure, and eligibility of situation, is all that can be desired.

The inauguration day was opened by a consecration prayer-meeting at 8 a.m., conducted by Mr. T. H. Bainbridge, one of the Vice-Presidents of the North-Eastern District Union. There was a good attendance, and several members of the National Council of Y.M.C. Associations, holding its meeting in Newcastle, instead of Liverpool, on account of the inauguration, were present.

At 2 o'clock a large number of influential and distinguished friends partook of luncheon in the Assembly-rooms. The Duke of Northumberland presided, and was supported by Earl Cairns, Sir W. G. Armstrong, Mr. Geo. Williams, of London, Mr. G. M. Bainbridge, Mr. W. D. Stephens, Rev. Dr. Bruce, Alderman W. H. Stephenson (Mayor of Newcastle), the Bishop of Newcastle, Earl Ravensworth, and about 250 of the leading clergy, ministers, and laymen of the district. A feeling and generously expressed letter was read from the Earl of Shaftesbury, regretting his inability to attend; and also a telegram from Mr. Joseph Cowen, senior member for the city, expressing best wishes for the meetings.

After the luncheon, Earl Cairns, Rev. Dr. Bruce, Mr. George Williams, Sir W. Armstrong, Lord Ravensworth, and the Chairman gave brief congratulatory addresses.

The formal opening ceremony subsequently took place in the hall of the institution. The room, which was decorated with shields and bannerets, was early filled with a large gathering of influential citizens and friends. Earl CAIRNS presided. After prayer by the Bishop of Newcastle, the President of the Newcastle Association gave an interesting history of the institution, and presented the noble Chairman with a silver key, having interstices in the form of the letters Y.M.C.A., which fitted the wards of the lock.

The noble Chairman was enthusiastically cheered on receiving the key, which he said he would treasure during the whole of his life, as a reminder of his first visit to Newcastle on a most interesting occasion. It must be a great satisfaction to think that the young men of Newcastle had a place of this kind in which they could find proper occupation and recreation, and where, above all, they could find encouragement to higher and holier things. He appealed to the company for further assistance. He expressed his earnest wishes for the prosperity of the Association, and formally declared the building of the Young Men's Christian Association open. He had been requested to say that the hall in which they were assembled was proposed to be called the "Shaftesbury Hall," in connection with the illustrious man whose name is so revered throughout the whole country.

In the evening a public meeting was held in the Town Hall, where a large audience assembled. The proceedings, altogether, were of the warmest and most enthusiastic character. Indeed, the aspect of the large gathering was a most cheering and encouraging sign of the movement; everything went to show how deeply the feelings of the Christian communities of the neighbourhood had been stirred, and how the interest and sympathy of the public had been aroused.

The Mayor of Newcastle presided, and he was supported by a large gathering of friends. After prayer by the Vicar of Newcastle, the Chairman, in a hearty and eloquent address, expressed his sympathy with all such movements. He said the Association had endeavoured to keep in view the one aim of doing good to young men, and no other association had brought about such a wonderful change in the life and habits and character of young men.

Mr. Thomas Hodgkin, in a loudly cheered address, said the Association was in no sense a religious forcing-house, though they were thankful when members took a decided stand as religious men. The Vicar of Newcastle bore his testimony to the fact that the Association had been doing a great work in Newcastle, and he believed would do a greater work still.

Earl Cairns, in an able and eloquent address of some length, dwelt upon the imperative necessity for such associations, of the beneficent action of their work, and of the success that had attended such institutions.

Mr. George Williams followed in a historical and practical address. The Rev. J. B. Meharry (Trinity Presbyterian Church), as a representative of the ministers, hailed with joy and satisfaction the establishment, progress, and development of the Y.M.C.A. Mr. W. Hind Smith, in an earnest address, emphasised, among other phases of the work, the importance of the great Temperance movement, which such an institution was in an especial manner so calculated to promote.

Votes of thanks were carried with great animation. The Mayor and Lord Cairns briefly responded, and the meeting was closed with the benediction, by Dr. Bruce. About £1000 was subscribed and collected at the meetings.

MISSION TO THE JEWS IN ROME.

I DESIRE through THE CHRISTIAN to present a brief summary of work in this field, which, after Dr. Philip's demise, remained vacant fully two years, and is now in the initiatory stage.

Three intelligent young Jews are now in the Home for Inquirers, making rapid progress in the knowledge of the Gospel. The Home is only a temporary resting-place while receiving instruction, preparatory to a confession of faith in baptism.

Medical and dispensary work is now in full operation twice a week in the Ghetto. An eminent Christian doctor attends to the sick poor, and ministers medicine gratis. A small hospital for convalescent Jewish children is in course of preparation, by the liberality of the same devoted brother.

I invite gifts of books and periodical literature in Italian, French, German, Hebrew, English, Russian, &c., for the reading-room. I would like to make of the reading-room a refreshment place, so as to draw Jews away from taverns and drinking shops.

Mrs. Ben-Oliel will superintend the Mothers' and Dorcas Meetings, to be commenced so soon as the Lord sends materials and means to inaugurate those useful modes of enlisting sympathy and kindness to the poor. Cast-off clothes for men, women, and children will be acceptable. The monthly prayer-meeting is open to all believers interested in the spiritual welfare of the Jews. We are waiting on the Lord for means to commence adult night schools, sewing classes, and houses of industry for Jewish lads.

The Tract Fund is a humble effort to present the credentials of Christianity to the Jews in a popular style; it is being abundantly owned of God, and is already bearing spiritual fruit. We solicit the earnest prayers of believers for these several efforts to do good to the Jews in the Ghetto of Rome, so long oppressed and degraded under the rule of popes and priests.

(Rev.) A. BEN-OLIEL.

KILBURN HOUSE OF REST.—On Friday, December 5, a goodly company assembled here in the morning, when Revs. W. Frith, J. H. Topping, G. D. Bartlet, and A. C. D. Ryder and Miss Mason gave brief addresses. Many centres of Mission work were represented during the course of the day, and their varied needs spread before the Lord. The evening meeting was well attended, and Mr. Bartlet's searching words on Rom. v. 10, "Saved by his life," followed by a few closing remarks from Miss Mason, made a deep impression. Amongst the workers present were Deacon Abraham and his son from Persia, Mrs. Shakoor from Cairo, and Mrs. Wigstone from Vigo, Spain. We earnestly commend to the imitation of others these reunions for waiting on God with fellow-believers to seek definite blessing, temporal and spiritual.

WORK ON THE BLACKDOWN HILLS.

ANOTHER annual narrative of facts connected with the work of the Blackdown Hills Mission is sent forth by Mr. George Brealey. Copies may be purchased from the office of this paper. As a specimen of the very interesting contents we quote the following incident:—

THE INFIDEL FIDDLER'S CONVERSION.

"Will you please give a call on my husband, sir? He is wonderfully taken with what he heard at the meetings. He's been an awful fellow." So said a poor woman whom I met one day on my way to the meeting. I found the place where she had directed me, but need not stop to describe the home of this man; it was simply a type of thousands of such. But the man himself was busy mending an umbrella, his trade being that of a tinker; while he had been a kind of stump orator at political elections, and sometimes a fiddler in low pot-houses. He could "turn his hand to anything to get an honest penny," he said; but these "honest pennies" were spent in the pot-house, instead of going to the home where he had a wife and several small children, which he ought to have kept much more respectable. He looked up from his work as I entered the dirty little room, and greeted me with a "Good day, Sir; I am glad to see you come in, though the place ain't the best in the world."

I replied, "There is an old saying, 'The place in which a man lives indicates what the man is.'"

"Another hard hit," he said. "I've had ever so many of them lately; but 'tis a long lane that has no turning, and I mean to turn now; 'tis time."

I said, "There was one good thing in a bad man's life which I often read about, and that was when he came to the end of the long lane, and said, 'I will arise and go to my Father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned.' That was the only good thing in his life of sin; it was the end of the lane." After that he was a new man, in a new house, with new expectations and new occupations.

"You mean the prodigal son?" he said.

"Yes."

"Well, I did not believe that story was true, till I found out the other night that I was the man; that it was just my character. I've been a regular infidel for years, or tried to be; but somehow I was often shaken. But now I'm not an infidel, for I know I've come to the Father, and don't intend to go away again from Him. That word killed my enmity against God, when you read about the love of God to his enemies, which led Him to give his Son that they may be saved from the hell to which I was hastening. Somehow that night I turned my back upon the old way, and, for the first time since I can remember, I prayed for mercy. I came home from the meeting without turning into 'the Bear,' as I used to do, and I looked at my poor wife, who once was a smart lass, now broken-hearted; I looked on my children, without a bed to lie upon, or a decent garment to wear; I looked around my poor room, and said, 'All this is through me.' And I prayed God to have mercy on my soul, and to take me in hand and put me right."

Since then he has taken his stand on the Lord's side, and has removed to more respectable rooms. His wife and children are resuming their former neatness, and my last visit to the home was very different to the first. The chairs and the furniture had all been converted! And as I passed a remark on the visible change which had been brought about by the change of life,

"Yes," said the man, "I remembered your saying that the place in which a man lives indicates what the man is. So I laid that up in my memory, and passed it on to my wife. Now you see the fruit of it, bless the Lord!"

Mr. Brealey is in need of help to sustain his varied agencies, and especially to minister relief to the many poor folks on the hills during the inclement winter season. His address is Clayhidon, Wellington, Somerset.

Notes and Comments.

WITH this week's issue our readers will receive a specimen copy of A New Year's Gift, an illustrated paper, specially adapted for giving away at this season. Supplies for distribution may be had from the publishers. For particulars see advertisement in this number.

Many workers among the London masses desire, as in former years, to give their poor neighbours a substantial meal on Christmas Day, at the same time breaking to them the bread of life. We have not space for the insertion of the appeals which reach us, but we hope, through the thoughtful generosity of our readers, to assist the workers very materially in this praiseworthy effort. More than a hundred Missions need such help.

The foreign missionary meetings held in Scotland by Messrs. Reginald Radcliffe, J. E. Mathieson, Stanley Smith, C. T. Studd, &c., have been most encouraging. Some of them were very remarkable, especially those with University students in Glasgow, Aberdeen, and Edinburgh. Messrs. Studd, Landale, and Stanley Smith were enabled thoroughly to engage the interest of the students.

Dr. Norman Kerr contributes an article to the current number of The National Philanthropist, on "Care for Inebriates," in which he contrasts the special attention paid in America to this branch of Temperance work, with the apathy manifested in our own country. Here drunkenness is regarded only as a moral vice; there it is fully recognised that after inebriety has long been indulged in it becomes a disease, calling for medical and special treatment. Dr. Kerr scores a good point, and one deserving earnest consideration, when he says:—

"Is it possible to remember without shame that there is no Home licensed under the Habitual Drunkards Act in Britain, where the poor though penitent dipsomaniac can be admitted? Such is the apathy of the Temperance public in this matter, so indifferent are Temperance reformers to the despairing cry of the hapless, diseased inebriate, that less than five per cent. of the money raised to open the Dalrymple Home has been contributed by abstainers. For the honour of England we trust that this shocking neglect of an imperative duty will speedily be remedied; that the truly diseased state of not a few of our weaker brethren and sisters will be fully recognised; and that ample provision will be made, both by the establishment and generous support of abundant Homes and by the enactment of a permanent measure with power of committal by a magistrate, for the reception and loving medical care of the most helpless and the most destitute of our inebriate fellow-countrymen."

Among the prominent workers during Messrs. Moody and Sankey's last London Mission, Mr. J. K. Studd and Miss Hilda Beauchamp will be remembered by many of our readers. On Wednesday of last week they were married at Holy Trinity Church, Brompton, in the presence of a large concourse of relatives and friends, and well-known Christian workers. The officiating clergymen were Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe and an uncle of the bride. At the invitation of Miss Beauchamp, 150 young women and elder girls, and several of the poor people in connection with the meetings and classes held at the George Yard Mission, Whitechapel, were present, and next day shared in the wedding festivities. The bouquets carried by the bride and by one of the bridesmaids, together with a large wedding cake, were kindly and considerately sent to these young people.

Can any of our readers kindly supply us with The Revival for 1867 and 1868, in numbers or volumes?

Mrs. Bayly, author of "Ragged Homes, and How to Mend Them," has written "An Old Mother's Letter to Young Women" (2d. J. F. Shaw & Co.), which we warmly commend to all ladies interested in young women, first for their own reading, and then for distribution. The "Old Mother's" purpose is lovingly to warn other mothers' daughters of the perils which beset them.

The remarkable sermon by Canon Liddon at St. Paul's Cathedral, on Sunday week, may well awaken serious thought among all who call themselves by the name of Christ. It was at once a plea for downright honesty of motive, and an arraignment of the too prevalent cowardice of professing Christians, in witness-bearing before an unbelieving or scoffing world. Near the close of the discourse there was this striking passage:—

"Every variety of blasphemy and folly has its apostles. Every negation, however audacious and desolating, has its defenders on the platform and the press. Every superstition, however grotesque or discredited, has its fanatical partisans and devotees. Moral and intellectual error stalks everywhere around us, now loudly advertising, now gently insinuating itself. Is the religion which our Lord has brought from heaven alone to be without advocates and defenders? Are Christians to be the only people who so weigh and mince their words, who are so very fearful of saying too much, and of being too enthusiastic, that they say little or say nothing in their Master's cause?"

The whole sermon, which appears in last week's Christian World Pulpit, deserves thoughtful study.

The Bishop of Lichfield recently uttered some faithful and timely words at Wolverhampton on the subject of social purity. He dwelt on the terrible prevalence of immorality among all classes, emphasising the fact that while East-end overcrowding led to much evil, a most discreditable state of things existed in very high society in London. In reference to school life, he said that few had any idea of the amount of impurity connected with it. His Lordship urged the clergy to endeavour to raise the tone of public opinion on the question. He advised the discouragement of the presence in Christian homes of men who were known to be living immoral lives, and, owing to the usages of society, were often welcomed there.

At present some of the clergy of the Establishment are far more outspoken on this and kindred subjects than their Nonconformist brethren. It is to be hoped that the latter will quickly wake up to the crying and desperate need of plain speaking to all classes of society—the middle as well as the highest and the lowest.

The Metropolitan Tabernacle was the scene of a large and very interesting gathering on Tuesday evening last week. Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, though still suffering from his recent attack of gout, was able to preside. It was the Pastors' College anniversary, and the work of the college was described in excellent addresses from the Chairman, Rev. J. Spurgeon, Rev. D. Gracey, and several of the students. An affectionate farewell was said to Mr. Thomas Spurgeon, who sailed from Plymouth for New Zealand on Thursday last. During his five months' stay in England Mr. Thomas Spurgeon has greatly enhanced his reputation on this side of the globe, and many prayers will follow him back to the scene of his labours at Auckland.

The following account of a recent scene in a physiological laboratory is taken from The Lancet of Nov. 22. It shows the need for increasing vigour in the crusade against the cruel and heartless action of some of our modern "scientists." Dr. J. H. Clarke thus describes the facts in The Spectator:—

"A dog has undergone a terrible experimental operation—removal of part of the bowels. The operation, though performed under anæsthetics, is one which necessarily entails very acute after-sufferings. It is the second night after this operation, and the dog is left in its pain, tied so that it cannot move. But it is not left altogether without a sympathiser. 'During the night another dog, tied up in the same room, slipped its collar, and bit through the cord which secured the subject of the experiment.' At ten o'clock the next morning it was found that 'the dressings were removed, and both dogs had been running about the room.' Let your readers picture to themselves what happened in the darkness of that awful night. One dog tied down, and unable to stir, is crying in pain. Another—awaiting the same fate—hearing the cries—struggles till it frees itself to go to the sufferer's help. Thinking the cords that bind it may be the cause of its pain, it gnaws them through. Next the dressings are torn off: and as this brings no relief, the victim rushes round the room in its agony, with its sympathising friend at its side. At last it can run no longer, and the experimenter, on his arrival, finds it lying on its side. 'The abdomen was tympanitic, and very painful to the touch.' It is a comfort to learn that the dog died at 11.45 a.m., after a dose of atropia given with that object."

At a meeting held in Oxford the other day the Bishops of that diocese, with Professor Ruskin and others, inveighed strongly against the practice of experimenting on living animals under the plea of furthering the interests of science. What is wanted is to so rouse the public mind to a sense of the cruelty and injustice it involves, that public opinion shall no longer tolerate it in our midst.

Rev. Francis Tucker, for more than twenty seven years the beloved pastor of Camden-road Chapel, London, is about to resign his pastorate. Present and former members of his congregation have already subscribed about £300 towards providing a permanent income for Mr. Tucker and his invalid wife. The committee who have this kindly work in hand express the hope that many who have known of and profited by Mr. Tucker's labours far beyond the limits of his own church, may be disposed to assist in the attempt to smooth the declining years of this honoured servant of God. Mr. W. C. Parkinson, 18, Carlton-road, Tufnell-park, London, N.W., is hon. treasurer of the fund.

The efforts of Temperance societies can scarcely be directed to a more important object just now than to secure the protection of the Congo region from the liquor traffic. A deputation from the United Kingdom Alliance, and the National Temperance League, has just had an interview with Lord Granville, for the purpose of urging him to support the proposition made by Italy at the Berlin Conference for the exclusion of alcoholic liquors from the Congo Basin. His lordship stated in reply that instructions had been sent to our representatives in accordance with the views of the deputation, and further expressed his warm sympathy with the object aimed at. The importance of saving the natives from the injurious and fatal effects of spirituous liquors cannot be over-estimated. It is simply abominable, in view of efforts for their moral and temporal welfare, to allow a traffic, which must neutralise, if not utterly destroy, every wholesome influence.

At the anniversary soirée of the United Kingdom Alliance last week, Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., was one of the speakers, and referred, in a very practical and suggestive way, to Lord Granville's reply to the deputation mentioned above. He said:—

"Lord Granville had that day given a most favourable reply to a deputation which had waited upon him, and asked him to use his influence to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquor in the Valley of the Congo. If this were done he could only hope that the Government would soon see the advisability of giving the people in the Valley of the Thames an opportunity of doing the same thing for themselves."

It is stated that newspapers and magazines are wanted for our soldiers in Eygpt. Many of them are sick and fever-stricken in hospitals on the banks of the Nile, and need mental recreation and instruction in their weary hours of idleness and pain. A good opportunity is thus furnished for bringing to their notice words of truth and grace, such as are so plentifully provided by the religious press. Those who wish to avail themselves of such opportunity should send their packets each week to the Rev. R. Stewart Patterson, Chaplain to Her Majesty's Forces, 14, Hale-crescent, Farnham, Surrey, for despatch to Egypt.

In an address to young soldiers, written by Professor Ruskin, and found in his "Crown of Wild Olive," occur the following noble and wise counsels on what he calls the highest law of knightly truth. We commend them to all young men as worthy of fullest endorsement: "Whomsoever else you deceive, whomsoever you injure, whomsoever you leave unaided, you must not deceive, nor injure, nor leave unaided, according to your power, any woman of whatever rank. Believe me, every virtue of the higher phases of manly character begins in this—in truth and modesty before the face of all maidens; in truth and pity, or truth and reverence, to all womanhood." Words these which should reach every youthful ear, and will commend themselves to every truly honest and manly heart.

Among subjects demanding prompt action with a view to remedying existing evils, is that of the marriage of Englishwomen with French subjects. It is gratifying to learn from an answer sent by Earl Granville to a memorial addressed to the Government from a meeting held by Miss Leigh, in the Council Chamber of the Liverpool Town Hall, that "the matter is occupying the earnest attention of her Majesty's Government, and that an arrangement is nearly concluded with the French Government which will practically obviate the evils complained of." Should this be brought about, great good must result in the protection of many of our countrywomen from what has been a prolific source of vice and misery.

We note that Miss Leigh asks very special prayer for the Home attached to the Young Women's Christian Association Rooms, 26, Faubourg St. Honoré, which is designed for young women apprenticed to milliners and dressmakers, or employed in shops in Paris. As Miss Leigh remarks, there is probably no position more fraught with danger than that of young and attractive girls who are thus situated. The very nature of their work-a-day life—fingering the fashions of a day—strengthens the natural frivolity of the human heart. Both in Paris and in London, and also in all our large central towns and cities, a great work presents itself to earnest Christian workers in connection with such an appeal as this.

At a recent Conference of managers and teachers connected with the London School Board, the Right Hon. Mr. Mundella, M.P., spoke strongly on the need for legislation on behalf of children. His words ought to rouse public attention to this subject, their truthfulness being indubitable. He said, as a proof that the law required to be strengthened as to parental responsibility:—

"Everybody had rights in England but the children, and there was nothing that could be done that was bad for the children that was not excused by the law. Everything short of really starving them to death kept the parents outside the law. Men and women might drink all they could lay their hands on, and bring their children almost to death's door, but there was no punishment for it. He thought there ought to be, and he hoped they might be able to effect some changes in the direction of making the parent do his duty by the child."

With our next issue, which will, we hope, be in our readers' hands before Christmas Day, will be presented an Illustrated Letter from Dr. Barnardo to our youug readers.

CAGE LANE MISSION HALL, PLUMSTEAD.

THE second Anniversary Meeting of the opening of this hall was held on Thursday last. Mr. T. A. Denny took the chair, and there were present a good number of the friends and supporters of the Mission.

The Report enumerated the various branches of the Mission, which consist of Evangelistic Services, Sunday School (numbering over 300 children), Mothers' Meeting, Bible Classes, Band of Hope, &c. The statement of the progress of the work during the past year was very encouraging, God giving abundant proof that He owns and blesses the labours of his servants in this poor district. Grateful acknowledgment was made of the help both of local friends and also of the Evangelisation Society. The financial statement was the only shadow on the report, showing a debt of £25 5s. 4d. due to the treasurer.

Mr. John Wood (Evangelisation Society), Mr. Robert Paton, General Anderson, and Colonel Stirling, C.B., and the Chairman gave short addresses. Opportunity being given for any to testify of blessing received at the Hall, it was very cheering to hear one after another rise and tell how the Lord had met with them there.

TOWER HAMLETS MISSION.

IN the presence of a large and interested assembly, the completed portion of Mr. Charrington's new premises in Mile-end-road were formally opened last Saturday afternoon by the Earl of Aberdeen. It is a very handsome structure externally, and embraces a roomy coffee palace, a pure literature saloon, rooms for branches of the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A., for benefit clubs, offices, &c. In his brief statement Mr. Charrington said that every possible method would be adopted in order to reach and benefit the masses of people around. As to money matters, about £1000 was still needed for the cost of the present building. For the erection of the large Assembly Hall at the rear, they had in hand some £4000 towards the £14,000 that would be required. An earnest appeal was made for subscriptions in order to enable the trustees to commence the work.

Short addresses were made by Lord Aberdeen, Mr. Frank Bevan, Mr. George Williams, Mr. Joseph Weatherley, and Rev. Marcus Rainsford, jun., commending the Mission to the warmest sympathy of the Christian public. In the evening the front of the building was illuminated, when its imposing proportions could be seen to advantage.

A CHRISTMAS HYMN.

BY REV. THORNLEY SMITH.

THE bells ring out a merry peal,
The Lord of glory comes,
Our wants to meet, our woes to heal,
And sanctify our homes;—

Comes from his Father's throne on high,
To dwell with mortal man:
Oh, who can sound the mystery,
The ways of mercy scan?

Angels announce the wondrous birth
To shepherds of the plain:
"Glory to God, and peace on earth,"
The chorus of the strain.

The shepherds haste to see their King,
Laid in a manger low;
The homage of their hearts they bring,
And in his presence bow.

That holy Child, to manhood grown,
Hung on the cursèd tree,
But put the great usurper down,
And gained the victory.

The victory over death He gained,
And now, upon the throne,
He has his royal crown obtained,
His priestly honours won.

Our great High Priest, He there appears,
He pleads his precious Blood;
And guilty men, with all their fears,
He reconciles to God.

Ride on, O Saviour of mankind,
In power and majesty;
Till all the earth in Thee shall find
Eternal liberty!

LONDON BANKS PRAYER UNION.

THIS Union held its ninth anniversary at the Centenary Hall, Bishopsgate-street, on Tuesday, December 9. In his secretarial report, Mr. Henchington stated that Dr. Sinclair Paterson is to deliver a course of lectures on "Christian Evidences" during February. A slight increase has been observable in the numbers attending the monthly meetings, while more requests for prayer than ever have been sent in. The Union has suffered for want of a more suitable place of meeting.

Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke addressed the meeting, taking several familiar proverbs about the devil as the basis of his remarks. The danger of gradually gliding into scepticism was forcibly shown. The two accompaniments of scepticism, viz., dread of death and the absence of self-control, were illustrated in some striking cases which had come under the speaker's personal observation. Subjects bearing on everyday life were also dealt with. "Tell the truth and shame the devil," was the last proverbial saying on which he dilated.

Rev. Newman Hall followed with some practical remarks on prayer. The temptations of London life were adduced as furnishing an argument for the need of prayer, and the parable of the importunate widow was presented as showing the type of prevailing prayer. Communion with God could only be sustained by prayer.

LORD SHAFTESBURY has been slightly indisposed the last week or two, but there has been nothing in his state of health to justify the alarming reports which appeared a few days ago in some of the newspapers. The venerable peer is already much better, and has been able to drive out two or three times during the week.—Rock.

THE LATYMER-ROAD MISSION provides a shelter for hundreds of poor children who otherwise would be left to all the miseries of a street life. The committee wish also to open their soup-kitchen and invalid children's dinner-table as soon after Christmas as possible. Gifts of left-off clothing may be sent to Aulay Macaulay, hon. sec. Latymer-road Mission, Blechynden-street, Nottingbill.

The Evangelistic Field.

MESSRS. HURDITCH AND SPURR.

MANY of the members of the Congregational Church here have long been praying for special blessing. A neighbouring minister wrote to tell us of the good work that the Lord was doing in this part of our county by Messrs. Hurditch and Spurr, from the "Evangelistic Mission." They were invited here, came on November 29, and conducted services daily in the chapel and schoolroom. Afternoon Bible-readings were held in the Friends' Meeting House. All the places were well attended throughout. Very many were much moved, and a goodly number seem to have been brought to Christ. The evangelists are now conducting a five days' Mission at our branch church at Zeals.

I write that your readers may rejoice with us, and continue in prayer for the prosperity of the Lord's work in this district. Should this come under the attention of any Christian gentleman who has the gift of ministry, and who would like to live in a quiet, healthy, and pretty country district, he would find a good sphere of usefulness here. Geo. Kelsey.

Chapel House, Mere, Wilts.

DR. SOMERVILLE IN ATHENS.

ATHENS, the former centre of learning, has been seeing strange sights lately. The citizens of that City, who 1800 years ago would not listen to "this babbler," who preached Christ risen, have within the past few weeks been crowding to hear the pure Gospel preached by the Rev. Dr. Somerville. What would the "Apostle to the Gentiles" not have given to have been permitted to speak night after night to the Athenians? We should thank God that the present generation of Athenians is not so wise in its own conceit as to put aside with ridicule and contempt, what a stranger from Scotland (the land of darkness, σκώτος, as some in derision call it) has been telling them.

The way, which at first appeared full of obstacles, has opened in a wonderful manner. God has provided introductions, most attentive audiences, halls, interpreter, choir, and hymns. Besides preaching on three consecutive Lord's Days in the English Episcopal Church, Dr. Somerville had eight opportunities of publicly addressing Athenian audiences by means of an interpreter.

These assemblages were almost entirely composed of men. Several priests of the Greek Church were present on nearly every occasion. In addition to these meetings Dr. Somerville held a public service for ladies, which was well attended. A more private meeting was afterwards held for the purpose of considering what additional Christian work the ladies of Athens might be engaged in. Dr. Somerville had also an opportunity of speaking to about 300 Greek orphan boys who listened with keen interest.

Though the Mission has been generally well received, yet there has been a good deal of hidden and open opposition. Some of the priests have been urging the Divinity students and others to keep clear of the services; indeed, there was a proposal made that an address to the authorities be drawn up to put a stop to the meetings.

The mode of preaching through an interpreter is not found to be any hindrance. Dr. Somerville has tried the method now in France, Italy, Germany, Russia, Spain, Portugal, among different tribes in South Africa, and in New Zealand, with equal success. Greece proves no exception to the rule. Dr. Xenophon Moschow, having a thorough knowledge of English, and being himself a Greek, translates phrase by phrase with astonishing exactness and rapidity. The interest in the meetings is never allowed to flag, and Greek hymns, many of which are translations of Mr. Sankey's, are sung at intervals in the service, and keep all from wearying. A choir leads the praise.

After concluding his Mission at Athens, Dr. Somerville, with his two companions, will visit the Piraeus, the port of the capital, and there a few meetings will be held. Other towns will afterwards be visited. Cordial invitations from Constantinople have reached Dr. Somerville, requesting a visit to Turkey.

NED WRIGHT IN NEWCASTLE.

WE have had a visit from Ned Wright, which has resulted in much blessing. On Sunday, December 7, the circus, which holds between four and five thousand people, was well filled by a deeply attentive audience, and many remained to the after-meeting. The meetings were continued in the Town Hall, Gateshead, on the three following days, and were densely crowded by the very class we desire to reach.

The Holy Spirit was manifestly present at each meeting. Many went into the inquiry-rooms deeply convicted, and left rejoicing in a newly-found Saviour. Two, who had been living together in sin, gave their hearts to Jesus, determining to live a new life. To God alone be all the praise. Esther M. C. Clapham.

Jesmond Cottage, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

MR. J. M. SCROGGIE AT ELGIN.

THIS evangelist began a fortnight's Mission in this town on November 2 (in connection with all the churches), ending on November 14. The meetings were so well attended, and accompanied by so manifest blessing, that it was arranged to continue them a week longer. Mr. Scroggie, having an engagement in Inverness on the 15th, it was agreed to resume the Mission for one week at the close of his Mission there.

This week ended on the 4th inst., and, in looking at the result, we are grateful for the fruit borne in the quickening of many Christians, and adding of souls to the Lord. Mr. Scroggie conducted two meetings daily, a Bible-reading in the afternoon, and Gospel meeting in the evening. In these meetings he was more or less assisted by ministers, elders, and members from all the congregations in the town. Indeed, it was a time to be remembered, and he has now left us for Paisley, leaving in our midst many who will have a lasting memory of his ministry among us.

J. Melven.

Messrs. MATEER & PARKER at MARGATE.

THESE earnest evangelists have just completed a fortnight's Mission here. They entered upon the work on Monday, Nov. 24, and conducted two services every week day, except Saturday, till the close of their engagement. Mr. Parker's singing was especially liked, several of his solos being given with deep pathos and striking effect. The Gospel addresses of Mr. Mateer were very earnest and deeply evangelical, evidently producing a profound impression on many of his hearers. On Saturday afternoon Mr. Parker conducted a service for children and families. The attendance was very good, and many of the young people remained after the service to declare that they had come to Christ.

The most encouraging features of the Mission were the Sunday afternoon and evening services held in the Hall-by-the-Sea. These did not interfere with the regular morning and evening services, which were preceded by an early prayer-meeting at 7 o'clock. The Hall-by-the-Sea is much the largest public room in the town, and it was not without many fears that the organisers of the Mission resolved to secure it for the occasion, although it was kindly granted to them by Mr. G. Sanger, the proprietor, free of cost. They, however, found that their fears were groundless. Many of the most earnest Christians in the town never expected to witness the spectacle presented by these vast assemblies; made up as they evidently were of the very class of the population for whose sake the Mission was for the most part arranged.

The impression produced at the closing service was evinced by the large number who remained for the after-meeting, many of whom seemed to be deeply concerned about the salvation of their souls. J. Drew.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

CONVENTIONS IN NEW YORK STATE.

NEW York State has had a visit from Messrs. Moody and Sankey at eight cities outside New York, viz., Albany, Troy, Utica, Rome, Syracuse, Rochester, Buffalo, and Elmira. At each point a two days' Christian Convention has been held, with pastors and Christian workers in large numbers. In every place where any opportunity was given large numbers of inquirers were found, and many, we trust, entered upon a new life.

At Mr. Moody's request, the writer, as State Secretary Y.M.C.A., visited each city, and held a preliminary conference with the pastors; representatives of the Y.M.C.A. made all arrangements.

At Syracuse, the Convention was held in the Armoury, and from 4000 to 5000 persons filled it day and night. Added to the ordinary gathering here, by invitation and arrangement of the State Committee of the Y.M.C.A., over one hundred students from the colleges of the State came for a College Conference, in regard to work among college students. Nearly 200 inquirers were here found, who gave their names and addresses.

At the Auburn and Rochester Theological Seminaries the usual duties were suspended, and professors and students attended the sessions. From forty to 150 pastors were at each session, and the stimulus given to aggressive Christian work was very great. At Albany, Troy, Rome, Syracuse, and Buffalo, special services have followed the Conventions. Mr. Moody held sixty consecutive sessions with but one day's rest; great power rested upon him and the people. He feels God has so signally blessed these Conventions that he will probably continue them during the winter, in different sections of our country.

The evangelists go to Toronto, Canada, Dec. 2—4; Toledo, Ohio, December 5—7; then to Indianopolis, Louisville, and Cincinnati, if the Lord will. Pray the Lord of the harvest to bless these efforts to send more labourers into his harvest. George A. Hall.

New York.

Mr. Sankey, during a visit to Clifton Springs, New York, took part in Gospel meetings being held there. The people were much delighted with his thrilling solos, and with an address in which he referred to his English experiences. At one service an after-meeting was held, when Mr. Sankey took the part of an anxious inquirer, his questions being answered by Mr. George Hall.

BRIEF NOTES.

Wallingford.—Our annual ten days' mission was lately concluded with every mark of success. The Town Hall was filled every night, with all classes. Mr. Rosenzweig's earnest addresses were listened to with marked attention.—C. F.

Twyford.—Gospel services are being conducted in the Assembly Rooms here during the winter on Wednesday evenings. Mr. J. H. Millard, of Reading, preached at one of the recent meetings with much acceptance.

The Church Army.—A Conference of the clergy and lay preachers of this society has been held at Manchester. The Bishop of Manchester presided at the concluding public meeting in the Association Hall. Testimony as to the work was given by Revs. W. G. Mallett, of Exeter; Lea Wilson, of Nottingham; F. S. Webster, of Oxford; C. N. Keeling, of Manchester; and W. Carlile.

Bourne, Lincolnshire.—For a fortnight very successful evangelistic services have been conducted here, by Mr. John Harris, of the Evangelisation Society. The meetings were well attended, and the hand of the Lord was with the preacher. Many were melted into penitence, and directed into truth. About thirty persons professed to find Christ. The members of the Church have also been quickened and blessed. The evangelist was well supported, both indoors and out, by the ministers of the circuit, and by an earnest band of workers. Several other evangelists have been doing good work in other parts of the circuit.

MR. HENRY MORGAN, 24 St. Mary's-road, Oxford has a Bible-carriage drawn by a donkey, and intends calling at the towns and villages between that city and Salisbury. We commend him to the sympathy of Christians.

OUR dear friend Rev. J. T. Wrenford, Newport, Mon., has written in "The Story of Our Mission" (S.W. Partridge & Co. 1d.), a narrative of the recent visit of Mr. Aitken to that town. It contains some solemn incidents, and will be very useful for distribution.

MR. THOMAS WAUGH has just been holding twelve days' services in connection with the Wesleyans in Middlesboro'. The whole town has been stirred. Congregations of 2000 men and women separately, and 400 professed conversion. A very simple man, full of the Spirit.

BRISTOL.—A very successful six days' Christian Mission has just been conducted by Rev. Robert McAll, of Portishead, at the Congregational Chapel, Castle-green, Bristol. The results are most cheering. One of these has been the establishment of a weekly mid-day prayer-meeting in the congregation.

PORT GLASGOW, N.B.—Mr. Mackeith, of Glasgow, assisted by his fellow-workers, Messrs. Steel and Pratt, have given here three evangelistic services for the young. The subject was "The Pilgrim's Progress," illustrated by lime-light views. The Town Hall was densely crowded by a deeply interested audience of fully 1200, who listened with the most marked attention. A larger number remained for conversation. While Mr. Mackeith addressed the young women, Mr. Steel had a most interesting gathering of the bigger lads, and it is hoped that not a few have received lasting good.

R. B. H.

MISSION HALL, ST. GEORGE'S MARKET, S.E.—A successful Christian mission is being conducted in this hall by the Rev. G. W. McCree, of Borough-road Chapel, and Mr. J. Lane, of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, assisted by Mr. Hawkin, of the London School Board; Miss Clark, soloist; Mr. Bachelle, London City Missionary; and a zealous band of workers. A large number of the poor have been most kindly visited by Mr. McCree's people, and the result is, the hall has been filled with attentive hearers, and it is believed that much spiritual good has been done. It is computed that a thousand adults live close to this hall, who rarely, if ever, go to any place of worship.

KINGSTOWN, CO. DUBLIN.—In the end of October we invited Mr. Weaver, who works with one of the Bible-carriages, to give us an account of the Lord's work through that means. Our souls got revived by the account he gave us, and we commenced Gospel meetings for a week or a fortnight; the Lord gave us such a blessing that we have gone on for the last six weeks. We intend going on as long as the Lord sends in the people. The place we had got was too small, and we had to take another hall. Our brother has great acceptance with the people here, and every night precious souls are brought to Christ, backsliders have been restored, and the Christians have been stired up.

W. J. L.

LENZIE, N.B.—On the evenings of December 2, 3, 4, special evangelistic services for children were conducted in Lenzie Union Church (Rev. W. Miller's) by Mr. Mackeith, of Glasgow, and three of his fellow-labourers. So many came each night to the meetings that some difficulty was experienced in getting them all accommodated. Mr. Mackeith's addresses were on the "Pilgrim's Progress," and were illustrated by optical lantern and limelight views. They were listened to with deep and solemn interest. The spiritual lessons taught in this book of "the immortal dreamer" were set forth with great simplicity and impressiveness. The interest awakened in the district by these meetings was deep and widespread, and there is ground for believing that the healthful impression thereby produced will have permanently good results.

EAST GREENWICH.—For the last ten years we have been doing our best for the poor and neglected children of East Greenwich. Besides preaching to them the Gospel we have taught them to be provident, and helped them as far as possible with food and clothing during the cold weather. Last year we gave away from 700 to 800 garments, all of which were made or mended by a committee of ladies. We also gave dinners for 787 families, sufficient for a good dinner for 4000 to 5000 people. We would earnestly beg of your readers on behalf of the little ones, to aid us in the way of cast off clothing or other help.—Yours faithfully,

WM. VASEY.

YOUNG WOMEN IN BRIGHTON.

TWO meetings were lately held in Brighton, to inaugurate the opening of the new Institute, 51, Old Steine, of the Brighton branch of the Y.W.C. Association. The first was held in the Town-hall, Major-Gen. Stileman in the chair. Revs. J. G. Gregory, J. B. Figgis, and W. Fraser also took part in the proceedings. A powerful address was given by Rev. CANON WILBERFORCE, respecting the importance of training the characters and lives of the young women of England. The speaker, taking for his text, "There stood by the Cross of Jesus his mother," dwelt on the courage and heroism of women in all ages, and their ever-increasing influence in modern times, which led him to look upon the Y.W.C.A. as of national as well as local importance.

An evening meeting was held the following day in the Royal Pavilion, preceded by a conversazione, attended by about 400 members, wearing the red badge of the Association. Some choral music was given during the evening by the choir, and the whole suite of rooms being engaged, afforded an opportunity for social intercourse and conference.

At 8.45 the chair was taken by Mr. MARRIAGE WALLIS, J.P. (late Chairman of the Brighton School Board), who spoke of the continuity of this work in Brighton, giving a short sketch of how it had been begun more than twenty years ago by Miss Catherine Ricketts (now a missionary in China) and other ladies. Some 500 boarders had been admitted since the Home was opened in 1880 in North-street.

After a few words from Rev. W. FRASER, showing the increasing need for such institutions and associations, the meeting was addressed by Hon. ARTHUR KINNAIRD (whose mother, Lady Kinnaird, first originated these institutes in London some thirty years ago.) He spoke of the objects and methods employed, urging that the principal aim should ever be kept in view—to win souls for Christ; not to be content with the mere name of an association, but to look to Him as the only remedy for sin, and the knowledge of Him as their only safeguard against temptation. Each member, he thought, should feel her responsibility, for this was not a work to be done by committees only, and everyone should try to win souls for Christ.

Mr. BROWN, of the Colportage Society, spoke of the importance of retaining the home influence and the home life in these institutes, and of their sheltering power from the temptations around. He besought his hearers to beware of the pernicious literature of the present day.

Mrs. REANEY, who was very warmly received, said that the glorious power of a life well lived could only begin at the Cross of Christ. She would earnestly ask how many lives there were as "music of God's making." Life was full of glorious possibilities, but we must go back and ever bear in mind that the fulfilment of God's purpose in each one must begin at the Cross. We must ask whether we have stopped short of giving ourselves to Christ. Nothing short of this will do. Then we shall be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might and shall live continually in the presence of that Saviour who has redeemed for Himself a peculiar people. Mrs. Reaney concluded by entreating her audience to choose for friends only those who fear God and can help them forward in the Christian life.

The meeting was closed with a few words of exhortation and prayer by the Rev. J. G. Gregory.

REGENT'S PARK COLLEGE PREACHING STATION SOCIETY.—This Society has issued a report of work done during the past year. Its object is to supply village and other chapels not able to support a settled minister. During the past twelve-months sixteen churches have been supplied by students, most of whom report very favourably of the general condition of the stations. Help is earnestly desired, and also new spheres of labour, as the college is prepared to furnish yet more labourers. Communications should be addressed to the Secretary of the Preaching Station Society, Regent's Park College, N.W.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

NORWICH.

A MEETING was held here on December 10, for the purpose of welcoming Mr. S. E. Ormerod, of Leeds, who was introduced by Mr. W. Hind Smith. The meeting was of a thoroughly representative character.

BIRKENHEAD.

At the annual meeting of the Y.M.C. Association here, held on December 8, there was a large attendance of young men. Steady progress was reported by Mr. Forsyth, hon. sec. It is believed that the membership would increase if a more suitable building were provided.

IPSWICH.

A well attended meeting of young men only was held in the Town Hall, on the 11th instant. Mr. A. Everett took the chair. Stirring addresses were given by Mr. W. Hind Smith and Dr. Roche. The excellent "Gospel male choir," conducted by Mr. Gill, led the singing. A good work is being done by the society in this town, and the influence of the Association is widely felt, especially among the business houses.

LOWESTOFT.

On Tuesday, December 9, a public tea was held in the public hall, when about 200 were present. It was followed by a public meeting at 8 o'clock. The hall was filled principally by young men. The Chairman (Rev. T. A. Nash) said the future of our country depended upon how the young men of the present generation were trained—physically, mentally, and spiritually. Mr. E. J. Kennedy appealed to young men to live for Christ, so that sceptics, who did not read their Bible, would be able to read them. Mr. W. Hind Smith showed that an Association like the Y.M.C.A. was worthy the support of parents, employers, and others. The Gospel Male Choir (conducted by Mr. Walter Wild, Secretary) rendered several sacred selections during the course of the evening.

HAMMERSMITH.

The first anniversary of this branch was held on Wednesday, Dec. 10, in Cadby Hall. Mr. J. D. ALLCROFT presided.

Rev. Dr. FLAVEL COOK, in a very practical speech, urged the study of the Word in its simplicity as an infallible guide through life.

Rev. E. P. HAMMOND made an earnest address, in which he heartily endorsed the work of the Y.M.C.A. He said if they were conducted as they should be, there would be no need of conflict between them and the churches. They ought mutually to assist each other. He said that during his labours over the world he had done all he could to help build up these Associations. Sometimes he had known them to be the fruits of great revivals; in many cases they had emerged from debt, and had been greatly helped by Gospel Missions. He placed great value upon the work of tract distribution, and the gathering in of outsiders to evangelistic services.

Rev. G. Thompson, and several clergymen and ministers, followed. The male choir, too, added much to the enjoyment of the occasion, rendering several of Mr. MacGranahan's pieces with good effect.

HOMES FOR AGED POOR.—In the notice of these institutions in our last issue it was stated in error that they are situated at Anerley. The Homes are at Minford-gardens, West Kensington-park; St. George's-road, Notting-hill; and Walterton-road, St. Peter's-park, Paddington.

THE BLIND POOR OF LONDON.—There is always much distress among this unfortunate class, most of whom have been deprived of the power of earning their bread by a calamity over which they had no control. Something, it is true, is done for the blind by pensions and by assisting them to dispose of their work, but the aid given is quite inadequate to meet the frightful destitution suffered by great numbers, even of those who before their blindness were comparatively well off. The Indigent Blind Visiting Society appeals for special funds to be distributed at Christmas. The society's officers are intimately acquainted with the circumstances of almost all the indigent blind of London. The committee desire to grant coals for the winter months, and a small gift of money to those who most need such assistance. The secretary, is Mr. W. C. Lester, 27, Red Lion-square, W.C.—Your obedient servant,

T. R. ARMITAGE, M.D.

PICTURES FOR THE HEART.

SUNDAY, 6.15 a.m.—Our guests are at breakfast, and we are quietly looking on for a few minutes. It is no small family party, for we count 169 heads. And what a variety of heads! We are almost inclined to indulge in a phrenological study, but more matter of fact and urgent considerations require our attention. Still off go our thoughts at a tangent, and we find ourselves studying the philosophy of bread and butter, and beef and coffee. Practical philosophy! Well this is, or ought to be, a practical world. Thank God that it is, to a very large extent, thoroughly practical, that "thoughts that breathe, and words that burn," do find expression in deeds of brotherly kindness and charity.

But we must explain our position. We have been out all night. We have travelled from the North of London to the centre, from the centre to the West, from the West we have walked to the East, looking into public places and bye-places, here, there, and everywhere, searching in the highways and byeways for homeless wanderers, and compelling them, by the quiet force of Christian love, to be our guests at early breakfast. Our invitation party of eight is now increased to a serving force of eighteen, and as every guest seems to be well supplied with solid food, and is being continuously supplied with liquid, we quietly retire to a vantage point and make a survey.

What a number of women this morning! One, two, three, four,—so we go on, till we have counted 37. And so many with grey hairs! not a few, too, bleached with the course of time. Dear old souls! it does seem hard that in the sun-setting of your lives there should be no silver lining or golden fringe to indicate even the brightness that has been. Where are your husbands, or children, that you are thus left to travel alone, along the remainder of the life course? We will try presently to make the journey a little brighter, and we will point to where the sun shall no more go down.

Just in the middle of the hall we recognise a number of women with whom we first became acquainted in the early hours of the morning. It was bitterly cold; only five degrees above freezing point, and yet these poor women were compelled, by their poverty, to take their rest on the cold stones, and to pillow their heads on each others shoulders. They had formed a temporary colony of their own in two or three recesses of London bridge, and in order to obtain some additional protection from the piercing wind which came up from the river, and whistled over the parapets, they had converted their tattered skirts into burnous hoods; and as they sat, thus huddled together, they formed a picture sadly in contrast with "London's greatness." As we passed the groups, our ears caught the tremulous tones of an old woman's voice, "It's cold, it's cold." Her fragile body was very keenly alive to the temperature, and her lips registered the sensitiveness of the physical thermometer. "It's cold, it's cold!" The testimony touched our hearts more than the 37 degrees recorded by Negretti & Zambra.

But what do these two little children here Pretty little things; one five years old, the other seven. How they cling to their mother! We spoke to them just now. With childish shyness they half hid themselves behind their mother, peeping out from convenient loopholes, as if endeavouring to form an estimate of us. The investigation seemed satisfactory, and the smiles of the little ones gladdened our hearts. But why are they here? That poor mother had to run from her home and from her drunken husband, soon after midnight. She had snatched up her two children, and rushed into the street to escape from his fury. And yet "he is very kind when he is sober." Oh that men should put an enemy in their mouths to steal away their hearts. Where could the mother go with her little ones? Happily she heard of our Mission hall, and she came and asked for shelter. We improvised a bed by the help of a few chairs, a roll of paper served for a pillow, one little one was soon tucked in, and the other nestled in his mother's arms, and so the early hours of Sunday morning were passed.

We take another survey,—this time the men specially engage our attention. There, in the corner, is a swarthy African, whom we had mistaken for an old acquaintance. Here and there we recognise those whom we have met during the night, and our brief conversation with them then, serves as an index to their life-histories now. There is an artificial-fly maker, there a tanner, there a brass finisher, there a butcher, there a young fellow of eighteen whom we found near Blackfriars Bridge, strangely unfamiliar with all night experiences of out-door London; there—we seem to know so many of them, but we want to know more about them, and so we arrange for another meeting later in the day, for quiet conversation, and for devising ways of help. At that later meeting no less than 98 put in an appearance. We want to do our guests permanent good, and not merely to give them a meal.

These men, 129 in number, are mostly eager to work, and past experience has proved to us, most satisfactorily, that timely help has proved a high road to real prosperity. Why, only a fortnight ago, we had a penniless guest, who is now in a good position at 35s. a week, and is "passing on the kindness" of which he was then the recipient. We could tell of many cases—but we are going to tell of them by and by.

But we must stop these erratic wanderings. We are reminded that breakfast is nearly over. We are to have some singing. Sweet voices have been distilling into the ears of our guests, "comforting words and kind," during the proness of the meal, but now hosts and guests will gnite in singing the old Gospel—

"There is a fountain filled with blood."

How the words ring out the oft-told tale! And the old familiar tune accompanies the well-known words. A ten minutes address is given by an earnest Christian worker, and our early service is brought to a close by the song of thanksgiving. "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

This work must continue. The required labour is freely and cheerfully given. All the workers present this morning have the luxury of paying their own expenses. But provisions must be paid for. What a good thing it would be if a few generous friends would just send their cheques for £100 each! How much good might be done with the money! But we know something better still. We want to enlist sympathy as well as obtain help. Better, far better, will it be if thousands of sympathisers will send smaller, very much smaller amounts, and thus cause the luxury of doing good to spread over a wider field. Rev. Andrew Mearns, of the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C., is the judicious almoner of gifts, both small and great.

EDINBURGH.—The past week was a busy one with the Christians here. Meetings were held on behalf of the Foreign Missions of the English Presbyterian Church, Mr. Hugh M. Mathieson presiding. Various meetings were also held for the China Iuland Mission, Mr. James Mathieson, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, and others taking part. Miss Leigh gave accounts of her work in Paris. Miss Charlesworth told of the Salvation Army work in France and Switzerland. Mr. W. Forbes gave addresses on Gospel Temperance in various parts of the city.

Y.W.C.A., BRIXTON.—This Association celebrated its fourth anniversary on Tuesday, Dec. 2, by a meeting of subscribers and friends, Rev. C. Harrison, senior curate of St. Matthew's, in the chair. The report told of work done during the year, and the need of larger premises, the rooms being often uncomfortably crowded. Miss Raymond pressed home on the hearts of all the unprotected life of many of the young girls who fill our shops and workrooms. Rev. Cumming Brown, of Wynne-road Baptist Chapel, gave instances from his own experience of the good done by the society in other parishes in which he had worked, and the Chairman closed with hearty, cheering words, urging upon all their responsibility to help in the work. The members met for tea on the following Thursday, when Rev. C. Harrison kindly spoke to them. All were pleased with a text and flowers, the gift of the Bible Flower Mission.

DESTITUTE CHILDREN IN BIRMINGHAM.

THE Homes in Bradford-street, Birmingham, are always open for the reception of really destitute boys or girls under the age of 16. While in the Homes they are educated, and when of proper age provided with a suitable situation, where a trade is taught them.

The Homes are supported by the earnings of the boys themselves, and by public subscription. The management is vested in a committee of ten well-known local gentlemen; 750 boys have been assisted in various ways during the existence of the Homes.

We greatly need help, not only for the ordinary support of the Homes, but for providing some warm winter clothing and Christmas cheer to a thousand poor children of the streets. Old clothes and boots are always very acceptable.

Your faithful servant,

ALFRED V. FORDYCE, Hon. Sec.

AUSTRALIAN ABORIGINES.

MANY of our readers must have followed with interest the progress of the work among the aboriginals at Maloga, in Australia, carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Matthews. They will be thankful to learn that it continues to prosper through the blessing of God, and that fruit is appearing in a considerable measure. We have received from our good brother, Mr. A. C. Rainey, Hill Side Villa, Weston-super-Mare, an autograph letter written by one of these children of nature, to a friend in Australia who has taken a deep and practical interest in the work of their evangelisation. The following extracts from this letter will show that the loving labours of those on the spot, and the gifts of friends in this country, have not been expended in vain. Mr. Rainey, we may add, will receive and forward to Mr. Matthews any help our readers may be disposed to render:—

"Maloga Aboriginal Mission Station, Aug. 8.

. . . . "Nearly all the little boys are saved here now. If you were to come up here you would be so pleased; even the old people are quite happy now. Do you remember speaking to old J—— and old G—— about the love of God? They seem to be so happy. . . . —— is on the Lord's side; he comes to the Lord's table. We long to see your face again. We always pray for you and Miss B——. K—— is growing a fine big girl now; we are teaching her to pray.

"The men here are not afraid to preach the Word of God to the white people. . . . These men really have the Holy Spirit with them. Several of the white men asked us to pray for them. . . . I will send you a nice text: 'Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in Me.' Bertha will send you a text also: 'If any man lack wisdom let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him.'

"Good-bye. Believe me ever your sister in Christ Jesus. May God bless you and keep you from all harm. Good night, dear sister."

NORWICH BIBLE FLOWER MISSION.—During the past twelve months nearly 7000 texts of Scripture (attached to bouquets of flowers and sundry woollen articles consisting of shawls, handkerchiefs, crossovers, comforters, neckties, caps, &c.) have been distributed in the various hospitals and public institutions of this city. The Hon. Sec., Mrs. Robert Adcock, Bracondale, Norwich, asks us to remind our readers that a repetition of former kindness will be specially appropriate and acceptable during the first few days of the New Year.

THRIFT AT HOXTON.—A public meeting under the auspices of the National Thrift Society was held at Hoxton Hall on Tuesday week. The chair was taken by the Hon. Conrad Dillon, who referred to the subject of thrift as one of national importance. Mr. T. Bowden Green gave a vigorous and earnest address upon the necessity of thrift principles being carried out by all who wished to improve their condition, and to succeed in what they undertook. Lord Byron said that thrift should not be looked upon as a penance, but as an agreeable duty.

PURITY AND HEALTH.

ABOUT three thousand men assembled in the Victoria Hall, Sunderland, on Friday evening, to hear a lecture by Mr. Alfred S. Dyer on "Purity and Health." Archdeacon Long presided, supported by a large number of ministers of religion and other influential gentlemen. A letter was read from the Bishop of Durham expressing his satisfaction at the visit of the lecturer to Sunderland.

The tone of Mr. Dyer's address of an hour and quarter may be gathered from one of his central propositions, that the moral and physical laws relating to the human frame are in unison, and that what is morally wrong can never be physically beneficial. Subsequent speakers spoke of the deep impression that the lecture had produced; it is hoped that the expectations cherished as to its usefulness may be fully realised.

On the previous Tuesday Mr. Dyer lectured on purity to a crowded audience at Darlington, under the presidency of the Mayor, Mr. J. B. Hodgkin.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND AT WELLINGTON, SALOP.

ON Sunday last Mr. Hammond commenced a Mission in this town, which, judging from the opening services, promises to be very successful. It was, unfortunately, the day fixed for special Temperance services in all the places of worship, but Dr. Cranage postponed his advertised address on that subject, and placed the new Hall at the disposal of the evangelist.

It was decided that the service should be specially for children, and announcements were accordingly made in all the Sunday-schools. At the appointed hour the large Hall was filled with children and adults in equal numbers, the front seats being reserved for the former. Mr. Hammond, whose power of addressing adults is quite equal to that with which he speaks to the little ones, held the attention of young and old alike throughout the meeting. His fiery energy, subdued at times into quiet earnestness, as he urges the claims which Christ, through his atoning work, has upon all, cannot fail to arrest the attention of the most indifferent listener, while numbers are led to cry out in their anxiety, "What must I do to be saved?" The speaker laid down with great force the fundamental principles of the Gospel, illustrating them in turn by incidents which have been brought before him during his long experience. In simple, though none the less forcible language, did he depict the Fall in Eden; the participation of all in the sinful nature, and consequent need of atonement; the death of our Lord, and his intercession for those who crucified Him.

The effect was seen in the after-meeting, when it was evident that a deep work of the Holy Spirit had commenced, and that the words spoken had found lodgment in many hearts. Christian workers were busily engaged with the anxious, and testified that many of all ages had professed to see these precious truths with clearer vision than ever before; and, appropriating them to themselves, had gone away rejoicing in the Lord.

After this meeting Mr. Hammond gave an address at the Y.M.C.A. Hall upon Temperance, exhorting Christians to more activity in this cause, and urging all present to abstain, if not for their own sakes, for the sake of their weaker brethren.

Many believers in Wellington are rejoicing in the hope that the Lord has great blessing in store for the town through his servant. Mr. Hammond's desire is to strengthen the hands of the existing churches, as well as to give a stimulus to the unsectarian work in which, for over twenty years, Dr. Cranage has so untiringly laboured. The hymns used were taken from Mr. Hammond's new book, "Gems of Praise." The choir had previously met for practice, the singing being conducted by Mr. G. E. Morgan, who accompanied the evangelist for that purpose.

The services are being continued, and the prayers of our readers are desired for a great outpouring of blessing, through Mr. Hammond's visit to this town.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For blessing on services at Paulton and Little Dean during the past fortnight.——For spiritual and bodily healing.

PRAYER.—For services by Mr. Opie Rodway, at Lechlade, Gloucestershire, from Dec. 17 to 22.——By a wife for her husband, that he may be truly converted, and that the Lord would restrain his recklessness, and that provision may be made for a large family.——For blessing on a Home on the South Coast for the care of delicate, sick, and convalescent children.——For the conversion of a brother long prayed for.——For Gospel meetings by Mr. Henry Lakin, in Manchester.——For blessing on a six days' Mission to youths, at the Brighton Y.M.C.A.——For a mother, seventy-three years of age, who is blind to all real sense of sin, and ignorant of saving truth.

THE GIFFORD HALL MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me to appeal to your readers, who are ever so ready to assist deserving and well directed efforts. To be as brief as possible, we purpose giving at least 250 well-cooked dinners, with materials for tea, to as many of the necessitous poor, whose cases will be all well known, for consumption at their own homes; New Year's entertainments, on three evenings, to more than 800 scholars who attend the Sunday-school; soup once or twice a week to the sick and needy; blankets, on loan, to those who have little protection from the cold at night. I could make your readers' hearts bleed at the recital of the distress in our midst; but I will merely say that at the adjacent board school, on one day recently, there were nearly 100 children who had come to school without a bit of breakfast, and nearly 300 whose fathers were either dead, ill, or out of work.

We are providing penny dinners for the children four days a week—on an average more than 200 a day; but these dinners are practically self-supporting, though we are obliged to give tickets to some of the children known to be too poor to find the penny. Gifts of cast-off clothing and boots and shoes may be sent to me at Gifford Hall, Gifford-street, Caledonian-road, and of money to me as below.—Yours sincerely,

BENJAMIN CLARK, Superintendent.

Hampden House, Crouch-end, N.

THE MARQUIS OF CHOLMONDELEY, who is staying with his daughter at Houghton Hall, Norfolk, has been seriously ill for several weeks, and from the reports which reach Cholmondeley Park, Cheshire, it apperrs that his illness has taken an unfavourable turn. In many churches in the vicinity of Cholmondeley Park the prayers of the congregations have been asked on behalf of his lordship.—Daily News.

THE BOROUGH, S.E.—A lady who takes great interest in rescuing the fallen women of our great city thought it would be a good plan to gather in some of the girls in this part of London, for moral and religious training. The use of a large school-room was applied for and granted free of charge. During the past year there have been more than 3500 attendances of girls, from eight to eighteen years old. Friends sometimes send old clothing, which is cut into garments and given to the most deserving. Many others might be able to do the same in their respective neighbourhoods. Clothing or funds for free dinners will be thankfully received by Mrs. Ellen C. Sowerbutts, of 34, Warner-street, New Kent-road, S.E., who will also gladly give her experience and advice to any interested in promoting such work.

A NEW INDUSTRY.—It is very instructive to note the providential arrangements by which the development of human industry is so frequently provided for. The island of Ceylon has, in past years, been famed as a great coffee emporium. Climatic and other causes have lately interfered with the production of this popular beverage, and much loss has been occasioned to those engaged in that branch of the world's industry Adapting themselves to the surrounding conditions, the planters have turned their attention to the growth of the tea plant, with such success that Ceylon tea now takes an honourable, and a rapidly-increasing, place among the products of the East. As the great majority of the Ceylon planters have gone forth from the British Isles, we have special cause for thankfulness to God in this adaptation of circumstances to the necessities of man.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

PARIS.—Thanks to a committee of ladies the Protestant prisoners in all the Paris prisons are regularly visited. A workshop for the benefit of those leaving prison has also been established.

EGYPT.—The United Presbyterian Church of North America established a Mission at Cairo, in 1855, and their work has succeeded well. A native Church has been organised, having many branches in Lower, Middle, and Upper Egypt. These Churches are under the direction of ten male and seventeen female missionaries, seven native pastors, and 145 helps of divers kinds.

SAVOY MISSION.—The work of God has taken root in Savoy. The population is at least 500,000, and during the season at the four places Aix-les-Bains, St. Gervais, Chamonix, and Eiran, there must be a vast addition. There is a vast field for Christian work, and I cannot help making an appeal for the immediate appointment of two evangelists. Help may be sent to me or Mr. Dondier, 7, rue Tabaz, au Geneva, Switzerland.

INDIA.—Writing from Batila, Punjab, on Nov. 14, Miss C. M. Tucker (A. L. O. E.), says: "The Christian Vernacular Education Society does not excite half the sympathy it deserves and requires. A flood of poisonous literature for the million readers of India requires an opposing stream of what is pure and healthgiving. It would be terrible to educate a nation of infidels. You may be pleased to know that THE CHRISTIAN, your valuable paper, helps to cheer our Indian homes, and when we feel discouraged by the hardness of the soil on which we labour, enables us to rejoice in the rich harvests granted to others. Not but that India has very noble converts. I visited lately the daughter of a martyr, who gave his life's blood for the Saviour.

WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

THE fourth annual meeting of the East London Women's Christian Temperance Union was held on Monday, December 8, at the Bromley Vestry Hall, Bow. Lady Hobart, who presided, in a few earnest words strongly urged those who were trying to overcome the habit of drinking to persevere in the struggle, though defeated again and again. Any who would help in the good work would be warmly welcomed. She could bear personal testimony to being able to get through far more work without stimulants than many who were in the habit of taking them.

The report, read by Mrs. Richardson, stated that the interest in the Union was increasing. A new feature of the past year's progress has been the establishment of local secretaries, who use their efforts to excite local interest. One of the difficulties met with is the evil wrought by doctors who recommend their patients to take stimulants.

Two admirable addresses followed by Miss Macpherson and Mrs. Reaney. Both contained startling statements concerning the increase of poverty and crime through drink. Miss Macpherson beautifully portrayed the happy homes of the emigrant children in Canada, contrasting with them the misery and wretchedness of poor little waifs of East London. She was sure that more women are being ruined by drink than men. Women are more readily drawn into the delusion of the doctors. Her eyes were weary with weeping over what she had recently been told about drunken and drinking women. The address of Mrs. Reaney was of the same realistic and practical character. Mrs. Servante and Mrs. Smith added a few words, and Lady Hobart urged the tempted ones to watch and pray.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—Dec. 21, Mal. ii. 1—12; Dec. 22, Mal. iii. 1—9; Dec. 23, Mal. iii. 10—18; Dec. 24, Mal iv. 1—6; Dec. 25, Ps. lxxii. 1—20; Dec. 26, Ps. cxiv. 1—21; Dec. 27, Ps. cxlvi. 1—10.

MR. THOMAS STONE.—A telegram from Melbourne has been received from Mr. Thomas Stone, of Greenwich, who took a voyage for the sake of his health, stating that he arrived there safely, and has been well ever since he left England. He purposes returning home per Ganges, sailing on December 17, and may therefore be expected in England about the 25th January.

Notices of Books, &c.

CHRISTMAS GLEAMS, edited by W. E. HODGSON (1s. David Bryce & Son, Glasgow), is a collection of tales and poems for the season, much superior, on the whole, to many of the Christmas Annuals. In his brief contribution the editor says, "It is meant as a reminder that Christmas without Christ is a mockery that could not long remain possible."

Under the title of "Footsteps to Heaven," Mr. Joseph Mansell, 35 and 36, Red Lion-square, W.C., has issued a unique and beautiful set of Sunday-school REWARD TICKETS. Each packet contains thirty-two tickets of twenty-four chromo floral designs and texts. They form a part of a Sunday-school system, which is explained on an accompanying slip.

CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE for December (7d.) begins a new volume, and contains many attractive features for general household reading. "How we founded Regent's Inn," is a fancy sketch of the institution of residential chambers for young men engaged in commercial and other pursuits in London, away from home. Something of this sort, if properly carried out, would be an undoubted boon to many a lonely young man in the metropolis.

Mr. J. E. Hawkins has added two comely little volumes to his bijou series. MY FRIENDS (2s.) is an "autograph album," not of the usual sort; each page reveals some scene in nature beautifully reproduced in colours, with a space for the autograph of a friend. It will make a pretty New Year's present. THE BEAUTY OF THE KING (1s.) is also ornamented in colours with texts for every day of the month. Both are of an oblong shape, and altogether very attractive.

FOOD FOR THE MILLION. By Captain M. P. WOLFF. Sampson Low & Co. In this brochure Captain Wolff proposes the employment of a large capital in the establishment of 150 public kitchens in the poorest parts of London, where the raw material would be purchased at wholesale prices, and the labouring classes supplied with cheap and well-cooked food. The obvious difficulties surrounding the project are fairly weighed, and the advantages in the saving of money, time, and labour, are vividly portrayed.

MY SERMON NOTES. By C. H. SPURGEON. 2s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster. These are notes of some of the author's sermons, not included in the Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, and have been published by request of many who asked, "could you not help us with some outlines of discourses?" Criticism would here be out of the question. Readers and sermonisers, however, will be glad to know that this volume, embracing texts from Genesis to Proverbs, is only the first of a series of four, which it is hoped will appear in due time and order. Mr. Spurgeon says he has prepared these frameworks, not to encourage indolence, or to enable men to preach without thought, but to help industry. Great service is rendered to pastors and lay preachers by the publication of these valuable outlines.

THE TECHNICAL JOURNAL AND INDUSTRIAL SELF-INSTRUCTOR. Ward, Lock & Co. The saying that "a little knowledge is a dangerous thing" bids fair to be obsolete very soon. The means of acquiring knowledge on every subject are now so great and so accessible, that anybody who wants to know anything at all need not stop at "a little." To hasten this consummation Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. have begun to issue, in sixpenny parts, a descriptive and illustrated handbook of "the leading branches in technical science and industrial arts and processes." All who desire to guide the labour of the hand by the skill of the brain will welcome the new serial. A gratis supplement, showing different styles of domestic architecture, is given with this part. A valuable prize competition is part of the scheme.

THE GOSPEL TREASURY and Expository Harmony of the Four Evangelists. Compiled by R. MIMPRISS. 67, Paternoster-row. This is a re-issue, in sixpenny monthly parts, of a well-known and valued production. The present large type, quarto edition, would be found of much value for morning family readings. The complete volume can be had, if preferred, price 16s.

THE SILVER MORN AND PROPHETIC VOICE. S. W. Partridge & Co. 2d. A new monthly magazine, under the joint editorship of Revs. Wm. Frith and H. Lindsay Young, M.A., and designed to be an undenominational paper, for testimony in regard to the Second Advent and collateral truth. Among the contributors in the number before us, are the Revs. Charles Graham, A. R. Fausset, Dr. Elder Cumming, W. Fuller Gooch, and others.

IN THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE for December (6d. Isbister & Co.), there is a striking article on "Tennyson's allusions to Christ." Few who are not familiar with the Laureate's writings would imagine how largely such allusions run through them like a golden thread.

MESSRS. HODDER & STOUGHTON.

CHARITY MOORE. By LINA ORMAN-COOPER. 1s.6d. Hodder & Stoughton. A tale of the brave deeds and unselfish life of a workhouse girl. It is romantic without being improbable, and altogether a very pretty story, prettily written, prettily illustrated, and prettily bound. With its covers decorated with holly and robins, it will be a welcome Christmas gift to many a little maiden. There is one experience of Charity's that we hope no young reader will be tempted to emulate. Few girls could come unscathed from a journey with a travelling show, still less succeed in doing the good our heroine is represented as doing in the same circumstances.

LIFE'S BATTLES IN TEMPERANCE ARMOUR. By THOMAS WHITTAKER. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. An original and vivacious autobiography by a veteran teetotaller. The writer once lived, to use his own words, "in a hole at 1s. a week." He now is, or was lately, Mayor of Scarboro'. That fact alone speaks volumes for the worldly advantages of abstinence. Mr. Whittaker's experiences go back to 1833. In advocating Temperance, he has come in close contact with such men as Daniel O'Connell, Father Matthew, George Cruikshank, and Mr. Forster. He has travelled all over England, and once to America, in the good cause, and can tell of adventures which few modern abstainers would relish. There is a very sensible chapter on Temperance bands, halls, and processions, which all workers should read with care. Though "Temperance Armour" is the main topic of the book, Mr. Whittaker does not fail to ascribe its efficiency to the grace of God, and he is a living refutation of the groundless statement that Temperance has only of late years been based on religion. This vigorous book will stimulate all abstainers, but ought also to interest and profit numbers outside their ranks.

THE MYSTERIES OF GOD. By PHILIP HENRY GOSSE, F.R.S. 3s.6d. Hodder & Stoughton. A series of Expositions of Scripture, addressed wholly to believers, and peculiarly adapted to help them in the profitable study of the Sacred Word. The author bases all his arguments and conclusions on the direct statements of Revelation, the unerring verity and absolute authority of which he emphatically asserts. Hence there are more than seven hundred quotations from the Scriptures scattered throughout the volume. The subjects treated on are of deepest moment, and by no means those which lie on the surface; but though connected with the mysteries of God, the reader will search in vain for anything like speculation in their mode of treatment, excepting the reference to "Omphalos," in chap. xx. Redemption is set forth in its past, present, and future aspects, time and eternity both being regarded in the light of the revealed purposes of God. Such books are rare. There is a redundance of treatises on religious themes, embodying human systems and opinions, but of books really expository and clear of carnal reasoning there is a lack. Mr. Gosse has added another such to the Christian literature of our times, and his work is to be cordially commended, as it must be heartily welcomed, by all thoughtful readers who "delight in the law of the Lord."

MESSRS. J. NISBET & CO.

"EVERY EYE." By Rev. GEO. EVERARD. 2s. Every reader of these Addresses must be the better for their perusal; there is a devout and restful spirit in them which wins the soul and fixes its gaze upon Christ. Invitation and encouragement are here to attract "every eye" to see more clearly Him who "cometh with clouds."

MEMOIR OF SAMUEL GOBAT, Bishop of Jerusalem. 7s. 6d. Who that knows the name of good Bishop Gobat will not welcome this brief and yet exhaustive account of his life and work? The materials for the autobiography, with the later additions to it, have been arranged by Mrs. Pereira, who has completed her task with finish, grace, and care. The Bishop writes in the simplest manner possible about his life, from early childhood, all through his missionary career in the East, to 1873. As Lord Shaftesbury says, in his preface, Mons. Gobat's aims and purposes were "transparent as glass," and we see in this single-mindedness and simplicity the secret of his success. Genial, simple, and godly, what wonder that he made many friends, and that those for and amongst whom he laboured cherish his memory? His influence was felt alike by Christians, and the Jews whom he so loved, and the good that he accomplished under many difficulties will never die. Two steel portraits of M. and Mme. Gobat enhance the value of this "Memoir."

CHOSEN, CHASTENED, CROWNED. Memorials of Mary Shakleton. By HER SISTER. 3s. 6d. Mary Shakleton knew what it was to have sympathy with suffering, by reason of her own invalid life, and as secretary of "The Invalids' Prayer Union." She was one of the Lord's own "separated" ones, and her beautiful hymn, "It passeth knowledge, that dear Love of Thine" is the expression of her life in words. This memoir, without any exaggeration or laudation of its subject, is another welcome contribution to the increasing store of books recording the grace of God in his suffering and triumphant children.

CONSECRATED RECREATION; or, The Christian's Leisure Time. By Rev. ERNEST BOYS. 1s. The subject of recreation, we think, has not received from Christians the attention that it merits. By some it is approached shyly, glanced at irresolutely, and then left as a forbidden thing. Others have qualms of conscience as to its nature, but are often led into error by following the example of those who will not recognise the difference there ought to be between the Church and the world. Still others will not allow that the Christian needs recreation. Mr. Boys belongs to none of the three classes. He insists upon recreation as "a religious duty," defines its approaches and limits, and examines it under every aspect. Those who are in doubt on the subject should get this wise little book. It is clear, impartial, cheerful, and spiritual in tone, and provides a good programme of Christian entertainment. Vacillating Christian parents might with profit read the chapter on "Restraining People's Amusements."

After this year "The Postman" (Passmore & Alabaster), conducted by Mr. W. Fullerton, will be known as "The Home Evangel."

A new series of "The Sacred Melodist" (F. Pitman) will appear in January. As the number of Sol-faists is greatly on the increase, the work in future will have both notations on the same page.

Dr. Cunningham Geikie, author of "The Life and Words of Christ," expects to start on a visit to Egypt (probably Upper as well as Lower) and Palestine, at the end of the present month. During his journey through those countries he will write a series of letters to "The Christian Commonwealth" on the various localities, customs, Biblical sites, &c., &c.

We have also received the following books:—

CLERGY REST HOUSE, WEST BOURNEMOUTH.—Dear Sir,—This effort for the relief and refreshment of evangelical clergy (or any who need such a quiet resting-place) has been so much blessed and prospered by the Lord, that the field has widened far beyond the reach of the originators of it. More rooms are needed; rent must be met; at the same time many are waiting to come, to whom it seems hard to return the reply that there are not yet funds enough to receive them.—Yours faithfully, MARY E. LITCHFIELD LAYTON.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT. Progress!!!

The Committee desire to express their VERY GRATEFUL THANKS for the practical expressions of sympathy recently received to carry out the proposed MIDNIGHT and AFTERNOON MISSION to the Fallen, both in London and the Provinces.

10,000 Portions of HOLY SCRIPTURE and GOSPEL TRACTS have been DISTRIBUTED amongst the Fallen Women of London. MEETINGS are being HELD in PLYMOUTH, PORTSMOUTH, &c., and recently a Meeting was held near the Docks for the benefit of German Women.

Turkish Missions' Aid Society.

For the Promotion of Christian Work within the Lands of the Bible.

THE operations of this Society under its new management are not sufficiently known. It is undenominational, and distributes its funds impartially. Last year forty separate agencies were aided, mostly American, but many of British origin. Contributions are earnestly invited. With a larger revenue a vast amount of solid good might, under the Divine blessing, be accomplished.

ARMY SCRIPTURE READERS' and SOLDIERS' FRIEND SOCIETY, 4, Trafalgar-square, Charing-cross.
Patrons—His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury; Right Hon. Earl of Shaftesbury.
President—GENERAL SIR A. J. LAWRENCE, K.C.B.

SPECIAL APPEAL.

The friends of the soldier are earnestly appealed to for funds for the continued support of the Society. Ninety Scripture Readers are now actively employed in the Army at home and abroad.

With such unquestionable testimony on all sides to the beneficial influence of the Reader in camp, in barrack, and in hospital, we cannot come to any other conclusion than that the Lord's blessing is resting in no small degree upon this Institution; and with this conviction deeply impressed on our hearts, we lay this matter before all who can feel for a soldier's trials, a soldier's temptations, a soldier's devotion to his Queen and country, but, above all for a soldier's everlasting welfare, confident—nay, more than confident, assured—that He will cause unknown supporters to spring up upon the right hand and upon the left, and stimulate old friends to fresh exertions. Two additional Readers left England on the 4th inst.: Mr. Scarlett for Bechuanaland in the Spartan, and Mr. Ewing for Egypt in the Indus.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Treasurer, V. G. M. Holt, Esq., 17, Whitehall-place; at the Bankers, National Provincial Bank of England, 212, Piccadilly; by the Secretary, Mr. William A. Blake; by the Hon. Secretary, Colonel J. W. F. Brandwith; or by Major Evered Poole, Enfield House, Southampton.

COLD AND HUNGRY.

FIELD LANE REFUGES AND RAGGED SCHOOLS

Works amongst the poorest and most destitute. The deserving poor never refused assistance. Applications for relief are most urgent and numerous.

President.—The Right Hon. the EARL OF SHAFTESBURY.
Treasurer.—WILFRID A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.
Secretary.—Mr. PEREGRINE PLATT, Vine Street, Clerkenwell Road, E.C.

Contributions received by the Treasurer, Secretary, or Editor of "THE CHRISTIAN," will be acknowledged in the following issue.

British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews.

This Society undertakes a work beyond the aim and capability of ordinary Missionary Societies. It is founded on an unsectarian basis, and receives its support rom Christians of all denominations. Its Committee and Agents belong to several Christian bodies, and its Honorary Secretaries are A. SAPHIR, D.D., and J. H. RIGG, D.D.

The Society has upwards of 100 who carry the Gospel to their brethren in England, Italy, Germany, Switzerland, Austria, Russia, Turkey, and North Africa. Their labours are supplemented by the work of schoolmasters and colporteurs. Tracts and copies of the Scriptures are circulated. Many Jews have by this Society been led to believe that "Jesus is the Christ." Much good has been done among the thousands of Jews in London by the Missionaries, by the "House of Call," and by the Mission House, 26, Church-street, Spitalfields.

Increased Funds are urgently needed, and will be thankfully received by the Secretary, REV. J. DUNLOP, at the Office, 96, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, London.

RESCUE SOCIETY,

FORMERLY OF 85, QUEEN. ST., CHEAPSIDE.

Offices: 79, FINSBURY PAVEMENT, E.C.

SPECIAL ATTENTION is called to the CHANGE IN THE ADDRESS of the Society's Offices, which is rendered necessary by the intended destruction of the old premises for CITY IMPROVEMENTS.

For upwards of THIRTY-ONE YEARS this Society, founded by the late Mr. DANIEL COOPER, has been carrying on its blessed work of helping to reclaim the fallen and save the endangered Young Women and Girls.

In this happy yet arduous work it has been eminently successful, and more than TWELVE THOUSAND and FIVE HUNDRED young persons have passed through its various Homes. Of this large number, gathered from all parts of the United Kingdom and abroad, over EIGHTY PER CENT. have been placed in service, restored to their friends, or otherwise satisfactorily accounted for at the time of their leaving the Homes.

FUNDS ARE NOW MOST URGENTLY NEEDED, several hundred pounds being required to close the year free from debt.

CONTRIBUTIONS will be kindly received as usual by MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT, Offices of THE CHRISTIAN, or will be thankfully acknowledged by the Secretary, Mr. C. STUART THORPE, 79, Finsbury Pavement, E.C. [927]

What are we to do?

A CALL FOR HELP FROM THE WEST!

Very earnestly do the Committee of the LATYMER ROAD MISSION appeal for Help from each Reader.

The lowness of their Funds is causing them great anxiety.

Fully £700 are needed before the end of the year.

The Lord has marvellously blessed the Gospel Temperance work since the opening of the New Hall.

Hundreds of Ragged Girls and Boys are gathered in each evening.

The Mission work consists of Sunday Schools, with an average attendance of 323 children; Children's Gospel Services; Evangelistic Meetings; Bands of Hope; Ragged Boys' Evening Shelters; Ragged Girls' Evening Shelters; Mothers' Meeting; Night School; Sick Children's Dinner Table; Soup Kitchen; Farthing Bank; Industrial Exhibitions; Christian Workmen's Club; Infant Day Nursery; Convalescent Homes (Worthing and Ramsgate); and other agencies for good.

Messrs. Morgan & Scott will be happy to take charge of Contributions, which may also be sent to Edward Blair, Esq., Fretherne House, 29, York-place; or to

The London Samaritan Society and Homerton Mission.

At the present time the work of the London Samaritan Society is in great and urgent need of Funds to carry on its various efforts for the good of the Poor and Destitute in London, and for its reception of Patients in its Convalescent Home at Sandgate, Kent.

BRIEFLY STATED, OUR OBJECTS ARE—

Free Dinners, Boots and Clothing for Destitute Children.

Free Breakfasts, Dinners, Soup Suppers, Coal, Clothing, and general assistance to the really Destitute Poor in all parts of London.

Free Lodgings to deserving applicants.

Assisting Emigrants by Loans, or otherwise, as agreed.

A Sea-side and Convalescent Home at Sandgate for Men, Women, and Children from all parts of the United Kingdom.

Assistance is given to the Destitute without any Sectarian distinction whatever, and without favour or partiality. Enquiries are made by our own Agents, or by the very many Clergymen, Ministers, Secretaries of Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, District Visitors, City Missionaries, Ragged School Workers, and others who take a deep interest in our work, and act as Honorary Almoners on behalf of the Society, and at whose Schoolrooms or Mission Halls Free Meals have been given by this Society. Over 100,000 Free Meals were given last winter.

DONATIONS will be most gratefully received by Mr. JOHN JAMES JONES; or

Mr. HENRY HICKS BOARD, Secretary, 57 & 59, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C.

Cheques and Drafts to be crossed Fuller, Banbury & Co. P.O. Orders to be drawn on General Post Office.

Donations for the London Samaritan Society are also received by the Bankers, Messrs. Fuller, Banbury, Nix & Matheson, 77, Lombard-street, E.C.; and by the Auditors, Messrs. Josiah Beddow & Son, Chartered Accountants, 2, Gresham-buildings, Basinghall-street, London, E.C.

FEMALE MISSION TO THE FALLEN.

SIR,—May I plead for help on behalf of a work, the urgency of which all will readily recognise who are aware of the grievous state of many of our London streets, and of the sad condition into which numbers of young women, who come to this city from all parts of the country, expecting to improve their prospects, only too frequently fall.

The Female Mission to the Fallen meets this evil in, I believe, the best possible way, by sending out earnest Christian women to arrest their erring sisters, with offers of help and guidance to a better course. They meet them in hospitals, in their own lodgings, in the streets, in the workhouses, and elsewhere. Lately many have been dealt with and befriended at the meetings held in connection with the East London Mission.

The special effort made to respond to this increased demand has necessitated a heavy expenditure, and our funds are now £900 in arrears. The office of the Mission is at 32; Charing-cross, W.C.

21, Portman-square, W. GEORGE HANBURY.

WORK IN BELLEVILLE, PARIS.

I WISH that the readers of THE CHRISTIAN, who for so many years have helped by prayer and gifts to carry on God's work here, should know that we are in urgent need of funds to carry it on, and also of voluntary lady workers who can bear their own expenses. The outbreak of cholera prevented me from accepting drawing room meetings in different places, as it was not possible to think of leaving the people. This has, of course, shortened the Mission income very much; and now, it being our aim never to be in debt, may I ask the Lord's children to share my burden for his Name's sake, and to send contributions, however small? Not only have we all the medicines for the very numerous patients of the Medical Mission to provide, to keep up the Orphanage, give necessary relief, &c., but the regular staff requires a large outlay, salaries alone, for six married people, and nine other individuals, being requisite. But if we compare the outlay with the enormous amount of good done through God's blessing, we can only rejoice. Pray for us.—Yours in Him,

GEORGE SMITH AND THE CHILDREN.

AS Mr. Smith's life has been spent in brightening the lives of poor children, it is fitting that those children who are more happily situated should seek to have a share in the testimonial that is now being raised, as a practical expression of gratitude to him for the noble service he has done. We gladly publish the following letter that has reached us, and hope it may stimulate other young folks to go and do likewise:—

DEAR SIR,—I should so like to do something to help George Smith. Father was reading about him, and I felt so sorry that after he had done so much for the brickfield and canal boat children, he should not have enough to live upon, or be able to rescue the gipsy children. I thought that if I sent you some money for him some other children might do the same. I enclose ten shillings from myself, and a pound from friends. "A LITTLE GIRL."

Several other friends have sent to us contributions to the George Smith Testimonial Fund. These and any others that may come to us will be duly forwarded to the editor of the Pall Mall Gazette, who has opened a public fund for the purpose.

CHRISTIAN POLICEMEN'S ASSOCIATION.—Two interesting meetings were held on Nov. 26 and 27, at Sheffield, for the purpose of inaugurating the work of the Christian Policemen's Association in that town. The members of the Force, with their wives and friends, were invited, in two parties, to a substantial tea, and attended in large numbers. The platform was occupied, each evening, by some of the principal magistrates and ministers of the town, several of whom delivered addresses. Perhaps the most interesting part of each meeting was the time occupied by the testimonies of Christian policemen.

Forthcoming Meetings.

EVANGELISTIC.

Mission and other Appeals.

MRS. WILLIAM NOBLE appeals for funds on behalf of the women's and children's work at Hoxton Hall, Hoxton-street, London, N., the permanent Mission of the Gospel Temperance Movement.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.—May I solicit the kind aid of your readers in relieving the misery and destitution prevalent amongst the poor of our Ragged School Missions, and in sustaining the general operations of this work of benevolence throughout the year?—JOHN KIRK, Secretary, Exeter Hall, W.C.

SADLERS' WELLS THEATRE.—Our brother William Catlin, of the Cow Cross Mission, who for thirty years past has laboured as an evangelist in the very centre of the great metropolis, is wanting funds for Gospel services at Sadlers' Wells Theatre, and dinners to the poor children, &c., at Glo'ster Hall, Clerkenwell.

SERMON LANE MISSION.—The Committee of this Mission appeal for funds to carry on the various benevolent agencies, such as soup distribution, Christmas gifts to the needy, and free Sunday morning breakfasts, so useful at this season of the year, when labour is in little demand, and distress abound amongst the very poor. Donations will be thankfully received by Mr. G. FULLER, 54 Liverpool-road.—D. COOKSEY, Hon. Secretary.

WORK AMONG THE SICK AND THE POOR.—Mrs. W. H. Wrigley, St. John's-hill, New Wandsworth, S.W., desires the help of our readers in collecting pictures from illustrated papers, &c., to be used in making scrap rolls for sick children in hosp tals, and picture screens for the workhouse infirmary wards. She further asks for contributions of Christmas papers, cards, &c., and of books for a library for railway men. Left-off clothing, boots, &c., would also be very acceptable for distribution among the poor.

HAM YARD SOUP KITCHEN AND HOSPICE, LONDON, W. —The Committee earnestly apueal for increased support for the daily work of the institution. It is open all the year. The hospice contains twenty beds, for cases of temporary distress, poor convalescents, and others of good character, who need a helping hand to regain employments. Since the institution was founded in 1840, it has provided over five million meals of soup and bread for the poor of London; and since 1873 it has distributed 558 tons of coals.—W. STEVENS, Secretary, Ham Yard, Great Windmill-street, Haymarket, W.

THE LONDON FEMALE PENITENTIARY (191, High-street, Stoke Newington, N.).—This society has been, through the Divine blessing, instrumental in placing out in eligible service, or restoring to their friends, more than 3000 reclaimed young women, most of whom have been under training at least eighteen months; and the Committee have reason to hope that, in addition to this number, many more have received religious impressions which will yet bear fruit to eternal life. Although the institution is partly self-supporting, the receipts fall far short of the expenditure, and the Committee are compelled most earnestly to appeal for funds to enable them to carry on efficiently this unendowed charity, which maintains continually about seventy inmates.—WM. E. PAGE, Secretary.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday Morning, December 13, 1884.

, Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan and Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O.O.'s payable to Morgan and Scott, at G.P.O.

, Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday Morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

BOSTON, U.S.—Mrs. Leavitt, who has of late been actively engaged in Temperance work on the Pacific Coast, under the auspices of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, proposes to visit the Sandwich Islands, Australia, and perhaps India, China, and Japan, in the same interest. She will, as far as may be practicable, introduce the Woman's Christian Temperance Union methods, and provide for a helpful interchange of sympathy and work, hoping that thus the influence of the Gospel Temperance movement shall eventually belt the world.

"I CAN PUSH A BIT."

SOME years ago, on the wild rock-bound coast of Cornwall, there was intense excitement in a little scattered fishing hamlet. Through the terrible gale that was raging a barque had been driven out of its course and had struck on a reef outside the harbour. Heavy seas were washing over the ill-fated craft, threatening speedily to strew the coast with its shivered timbers. The unhappy sailors had hoisted a signal of distress, and were straining their eyes through the blinding rain anxiously expecting the launch of the life-boat to rescue them from their perilous situation.

In a trice the few fishermen on shore, who had been watching the struggles of the barque to gain the harbour, ran down to the boat-house, and prepared to go across the foam-crested billows, in the very teeth of the storm, on their errand of mercy.

In their attempt to launch the life-boat, however, zeal got the better of prudence. The wheels of the carriage upon which the boat was placed became embedded in the sand and defied every effort to push them forward. Again and again did some put their shoulders to the wheel and pull the ropes, but all their heaving-ahoy was in vain. Loud were their regrets that many of their mates were away out at sea fishing. Heart-felt was their pity for yonder poor souls, almost in despair, yet clinging for dear life to the rigging. Many a horny hand brushed away a scalding tear from a weather-beaten face, and in the crowd of women, who had thrown shawls round their heads and come down to see the wreck, there was mingled weeping and praying.

Standing close by, his cap pulled tightly down on his head, a comforter loosely rolled round his neck by the hands of a doting mother, his hands thrust into the pockets of his great-coat, with ruddy cheeks and eyes sparkling with excitement, was little Harry Blair, "our parson's boy"—as the warm-hearted villagers called him.

"Poor souls! The Lord have mercy on them. They'll soon be in another world. It's no use, we can't save them," said John Treherne, the leading man.

Then out spoke "our parson's boy"—

"Oh! men, don't give up. Have another try, and I'll help you."

"God bless you, Master Harry, your heart's good, but what could you do?" replied John, looking down with affectionate pride upon "our parson's boy," flushed with eager chivalry.

"Why, John, I'll do my best. Of course I am not big, but I can push a bit."

"Bravo!" cried all in chorus. A thrill of enthusiasm ran through the disheartened toilers.

"Our parson's boy" seized a rope; his example stirred the women to action; they lent their strength. None stood idly by—a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether—slowly the wheels moved through the loose sand. The life-boat was launched; the wreck was reached just before it broke up, and the crew of thirteen hands were all saved from a watery grave.

Along that coast, when the howling wind and the sullen roar of the waves make brave deeds and hair-breadth escapes the theme at night by every fireside, for many a long year will it be told and told again how "our parson's boy" pushed his bit.

The application of this incident follows. Those perishing sailors clinging to the wreck remind me of the thousands of poor street-lads ready to perish in our Great City. Our Home is the life-boat, a big one, for it has to bear 250 rescued ones at a time across the waters of life's troubled sea; a stout one, for it has bravely weathered many a storm of adverse circumstances; best of all our Father is at the helm. John Treherne, the leading man, stands for the often perplexed writer, sometimes almost tempted to say, "It's no use; we can't save them." As a matter of fact, without more help we cannot go to the rescue of many still left amidst the wreckage, soon to sink helplessly battling against the wild waves of temptation and want unless we speedily save them from their doom.

Of all who read these lines, who will act the part of "our parson's boy," cheer up our despairing hearts, strengthen our failing hands, and help our struggling rescue work by coming forward and saying, "I'll do my best; I'll push my bit"? We need £750 by Christmas morning, to speed us on our mission of mercy. I will be pleased to send a beautiful collecting-card, printed by my rescued boys, and a copy of a new book, "Mr. Fegan's Work amongst Waifs and Strays," by a lady, to anyone who feels moved to "push a bit."

Cheques should be crossed London and County Bank, and P.O. Orders made payable at G.P.O.

Maintains the Ministry of truth and benevolence at Six Gospel Halls and other buildings at Kingsland, Millwall, Stoke Newington, Old Ford, Cubitt Town, Bow Common (recently acquired); Holiday Cottage, near Enfield; Sailors' Rest and Reading Room (Millwall Docks); Temperance Carriage (Self-supporting); Three Ragged Schools.
With few exceptions the labourers are voluntary.

There is at present very much need for the fellowship of the Lord's people, which we venture earnestly to solicit.

1. FOR BOW COMMON.

An earnest band of voluntary Christian workers in Devon's Road having cast their lot amongst us, we have taken on lease, with option of purchasing the freehold, a large warehouse of three floors. The ground floor, with few alterations, and roof over yard, will furnish a Hall for 800 souls.

Having obtained possession last week, we quickly made the first floor wind and water tight, and, helped with a large quantity of old seats from a tent, we opened this floor for the Gospel last Sunday week, and three souls were the precious first fruits.

We are now waiting upon the Lord for about £300 for the necessary alterations. The accommodation this would furnish for the various activities of love's best service encourages us to look for a speedy assistance.

2. FOR TEMPORAL DISTRESS.

We give two cases met with yesterday in our ordinary visitation. They are not the victims of drink. We should like to help them, and hundreds of others in as sad a condition.

1.—6, W——— Street, ground floor front. Man paralysed, in bed several years, now has abscess forming in head; four children, wife too delicate to work; having not sufficient bread for children, parents had not broken their fast that day.

2.—36, M——— Row. Man nearly blind, earns a little when able at shoemaking; eight little children, oldest but one is a girl, 12 years old, suffering with hip disease and abscesses, having apparently but one old garment on her emaciated figure.

3. FOR GENERAL PURPOSES.

We regret to say that at our Annual Audit two months since, our General Purposes Account closed with a serious balance on the wrong side. We have now as we write several accounts before us which ought to be paid. A little company of our Voluntary Workers met together a few evenings ago to pray specially for the Lord's appearance for us in this trial.

It rejoices us, nevertheless, to ask praise for the continued spiritual prosperity enjoyed, and the souls that are being given us in our labour from week to week.

We will gladly send our little Report for three stamps to any friend requiring.

Yours in the Lord's work,

ROTHERHITHE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

We have commenced our permanent Hall, the cost of which, including everything, will be about £1,000. Mr. Samuel Morley has promised £200, other contributions raise the sum to £500.

The District is very destitute thousands are only earning enough to keep body and soul together, many hundreds nothing. During the past nine years, this work has been blessed to the salvation of many.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of SHAFTESBURY, K.G.

ESTABLISHED 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES:

27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN;

AND 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE, or by the Proprietors of this paper.

NOTE.—Subscriptions or Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Friends will please notice the exact title "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

The Anchorage.

HEBREWS vi. 19.

To shelter respectable Young Women in Trouble.

FOR rules of admission to the Anchorage House, and full particulars of the work of the Anchorage Mission, and for trained servants, apply (by letter only) to Mrs. H. STUART-WORTLEY, Rosslyn House, Grove End-road, N.W., London.

Many of the young women admitted being mothers or about to become so, the extra care they require, and (when friendless) the help that the Mission must give towards paying for their infants at nurse during the first few months of the mother's return to service or other occupation, causes the work to be unusually costly, and subscriptions are much required, sent either to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley (President of the Ladies' Committee) at her private address as above, or to Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

NEW PAPER FOR SUNDAY READING.

SUNDAY WORDS.

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

OF SUNDAY READING, especially of a light and popular order, there is comparatively little; and the unequivocal success of the papers recently established for week-day reading, in which the spirit of the adage "Brevity is the soul of wit" has been freely acted on, has suggested that a Journal filled with brief and attractive Sunday Reading would meet a general want, and be welcomed in many a household.

SUNDAY WORDS will be so arranged that its pages, even when serious, shall never be dull, and it will always be free from any sectarian bias. Good, true, and noble thoughts, original and selected, will have their place; suitable Fiction by well-known writers will be given week by week; papers on the teachings of the Christian seasons will be contributed by competent authors; Bible Questions, with Prizes for the best answers, will offer occupation to younger readers; Hymns and Music will add variety; AND THE MAIN PURPOSE—TO GIVE A BUDGET OF SHORT PITHY READINGS, NEW AND OLD—WILL CONSTANTLY BE KEPT IN VIEW.

For a paper thus cast in a form which makes it easy of digestion and pleasant to take up in leisure moments, there is, no doubt, a large public, and no effort will be spared to render SUNDAY WORDS one of the most popular publications of the day.

THE SIMPLICITY OF RESTORATION TO HEALTH.

How many sufferers there are who for years have been subject to frequently recurring attacks of some malady, or have been in continual weakness and pain from disease, who, had they but known what course to take to recover health, would have considered scarce any sacrifice too great to attain so desirable an end. Theories more or less abstruse have been propounded in numberless instances for the removal of chronic diseases, and sufferers have eagerly sought to work them out, in the hope of being cured, but have failed, the reason of failure being that they sought by recondite measures to arrive at that which can only be accomplished by following out the simple rules which nature has laid down as the means of restoration.

There are many influences which nature provides to assist the constitution to overcome the various ailments to which it may be subjected, and foremost among them is Magneto-Electricity, which, though so mighty a factor in the scientific developments of to-day, becomes when applied to a deranged system the gentlest healer that could be conceived; adapted to correct the lightest ill, and also to gradually eradicate the most stubborn affection. Almost every one of the ailments which beset the human frame are traceable to a disorganisation in some way or other of the nervous system, and this condition is more or less readily overcome by Magnetism, which quiets all disturbances, and restores the organism to a healthy and harmonious working order.

Numberless instances could be cited to prove the soundness and truth of our arguments, and a thousand grateful patients are ready to bear willing testimony to the efficacy of treatment by means of Magnetism in terms of a like nature to the following:—

From MISS C. A. HARRIS, Godstone Road, Caterham Valley, Surrey.

November 26, 1884.

"Having derived great benefit from your treatment, which was commenced a few months ago, I gladly write to tell you that the neuralgic pain in my side, which at one time almost prevented me from walking, has so much abated that I am now able to take quite long walks, and feel altogether brighter.

"The means prescribed to relieve facial neuralgia has afforded instantaneous relief whenever used, but now, I am thankful to be able to say, it is seldom required."

Mr. B. Copson Garratt will always be pleased to attend to inquiries from sufferers, no matter how chronic or severe their affections may be, and will in every instance state his candid opinion of the case brought before him. All consultations, whether personally or by correspondence, are free. A series of essays and tractates upon Mr. Garratt's treatment may be had post free upon application at his Consulting Rooms, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND IN ENGLAND.

THE CONVERSION OF CHILDREN.

By Rev. E. PAYSON HAMMOND, M.A.,

Author of

"Gathered Lambs," "Jesus' Lambs," "The Better Life," "Little Ones in the Fold," "Familiar Talks with the Children," "Tracts for the Children," &c.

Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 2s. 6d.

REVIEWS.

"Many remarkable facts are here given, which deserve the attention of those especially who are incredulous as to the early age at which children may begin to live consciously a Christian life."
Evangelical Christendom.

"We commend the book very heartily to the prayerful attention of all parents and teachers.—The Freeman.

"We are quite sure that this book is well calculated to encourage effort and stimulate the Church to diligence in this direction."—The Methodist.

"This book is written for adults, and specially for those who are engaged in Sabbath-school teaching, or other work for the soul's good of children. . . . . Wise and precious counsels are presented to parents and guardians of youth for the goodly up-bringing of the children committed to their care."—Christian Week.

"We devoutly wish that by some means or other a copy could be placed in the hands of every Sunday-school superintendent and every pastor of a church."
Pennel.

"A careful perusal of the testimony here given must convince every unprejudiced mind that in our days, as in the days of old, God perfects praise out of the mouths of babes and sucklings."
Woman's Work.

"A most useful book, dealing with a most important subject in a masterly way. The whole subject of the early conversion of children is carefully considered by one whose experience in this special line entitles him to speak with authority. We heartily commend it to our readers, and especially to parents, Sunday-school teachers, and all who have to do with children."—Christian Progress.

A PERSONAL CHRIST.

32 pages, Crown 16mo. Price One Penny.

"Is Christ Himself the object of my heart's first and deepest love? If He had not been the Object of faith above all, I could not have been saved. Is He, then, in like manner, the Object of my heart's devotion now? And is His name to me a name above every other? There is nothing else that can or will unite souls, or give such power or testimony before the world for Christ."—Extract.

Cruden's Concordance

(UNABRIDGED).

The special features of this edition are the NEW TRANSLATION, Revision, and Extension of the PROPER NAMES OF THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS, with their meanings in the Original Languages.

The Twelve following exquisite Steel Plate Engravings:—

Samaria.	Mount Tabor.	Shechem—Sychar.
Elisha's Fountain, Jericho.	Tyre.	Tiberias.
Rephidim.	Hebron.	Bethany.
Damascus.	Jerusalem from the South.	Athens.

And Six beautifully-coloured Maps.

The Rev. J. L. PORTER, D.D., Professor of Biblical Criticism, speaking of the Steel Plate Engravings, says:—

"I have examined with care the views for Biblical Illustration. . . . The Engravings are very beautiful. In clearness, accuracy, and general effect, they surpass, I think, any I have seen. The places represented are all familiar to me; and I have been particularly struck by the fidelity with which your artist has reproduced Frith's admirable photographs."—J. L. PORTER.

The Tabernacle, The Priesthood, and The Offerings;

With the Spiritual Lessons derived from the Ritual and Ceremonies of the Old Dispensation.

By HENRY W. SOLTAU,

Author of "The Holy Vessels of the Tabernacle," "The Soul and its Difficulties, &c.

With Memoir of the Author, FOUR BEAUTIFUL COLOURED ILLUSTRATIONS, and numerous smaller engravings. Cloth, 5s.; Cloth, gilt edges, 6s.

"The book is full of teaching, spiritual, and far-reaching; and we have much enjoyed reading it. The work is a good five shillings'-worth."—Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, in The Sword and Trowel.

"Of this work we can speak very highly. It is not a mere description of Temple Ritual and Jewish Ceremonies; but is more of a commentary and exposition; and is rich in evangelical teaching. The illustrations in colour and gold are exceedingly beautiful."—Christian Age.

"The reading of this book has been to us a precious means of grace: and to all who love truth sweetly told we advise its study. It is full of Christ. The truths of the Gospel gleam on every page; and we feel that we shall be doing good work for any Christian brother whom we may induce to read it. Nothing seems strained: all comes out naturally. Of the get-up of the book, the binding is good, the printing is exquisite, the illustrations are elegant, and taken altogether we have not derived for some time so much pleasure and profit in reading a single volume."
The Baptist Messenger.

Complete in One Volume, Handsomely Bound in Cloth, 1083 pages, 10*s.* 6*d.*

Foxe's Book of Martyrs.

A Complete and Authentic Account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Triumphant Deaths of Primitive and Protestant Martyrs in all parts of the World.

By John Foxe.

WITH TWELVE FULL-PAGE ILLUSTRATIONS.

"As a complete edition of Foxe's Martyrs, this is by far the handiest and most attractive we know. In paper, type, illustrations, and binding, the book does great credit to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, to whom the Christian public are indebted for this timely publication."—Primitive Methodist.

"Messrs. Morgan and Scott have just published a new edition of Foxe's Book of Martyrs, which deserves a word of greeting. The present edition extends far beyond Foxe's times; having been enriched by the Rev. J. MILNER and others; and brought down to the present century by the Rev. INGRAM COBBIN. Altogether it is a cheap and complete Book of Martyrs, well printed and elegantly bound; and suitable for a gift-book."—Record.

P. P. Bliss;

HIS LIFE AND WORK.

Edited by Major WHITTLE and Rev. W. GUEST.

Containing also an Introduction by D. L. MOODY, and Memorial Notice by IRA D. SANKEY.

"A most interesting and invaluable book, both for the young and the aged, and cannot be too highly prized or too widely circulated; in fact, from the good it is calculated to do, it ought to be in the hands of every English reader."
Midland Gazette.

"Among the sweet singers who have arrested the attention of the public ear, cultivated the public taste, and softened the public heart by the production of the thoughts and music of their souls, no one passed a more interesting and instructive life and suffered a sadder death than Mr. P. P. Bliss, a sketch of whose career has been published at an extremely low price by Messrs. Morgan and Scott. The early life of Mr. Bliss is full of much that is of great utility, not only as an example of perseverance and success, but also as affording a remarkable instance of Christian experience."
Leith Boro' Pilot.

HAND-FINISHED BIBLE PICTURES
IN OIL COLOURS (size 24in. by 13½in.).
A RARE OPPORTUNITY.
To all lovers of really good Pictures (and who is not?) we are now offering a bargain rarely met with, viz., a pair of selected copies of those two well-known and remarkably fine Pictures—
THE LAST SUPPER and THE MARRIAGE FEAST.
in Oil-Colours (size, 24in. by 13½in.), for the merely nominal sum of 2s. (26 stamps) the pair, or 1s. 1d. (14 stamps) for single copies, all carriage free and securely packed.
It would be impossible for us to give an adequate description of the Pictures; we could not do justice to them. The Original Paintings are probably Worth Thousands of Pounds.
We guarantee our copies to be as faithful in every detail as the art of man can make them, and we feel confident that nothing like the value has before been offered to the public.
For bazaars, &c., these Pictures are particularly suitable, as they command a ready sale at much larger prices when seen in position.

TWELFTH SERIES
OF WEEKLY CASES.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "The Christian," WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.
Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
CASE of Miss FRANKLIN, of SALISBURY.
This patient, anxious about herself in consequence of her father's family having all died of Consumption, came to see me at Coombe Lodge in April of this year. It was a very critical time. There was the condition of the lungs and system just ripe for the development of positive disease. Cough and expectoration had commenced in the summer of 1883. The latter was jelly-like, and streaked with blood.
In June all the symptoms were better. In July she writes from Folkestone:—"My cough seems quite gone, and very slight expectoration now. I think I shall not want more medicine, but should like still to write you. I am very glad indeed I came to you."
The patient was advised not to leave off the medicine until every symptom had disappeared (a course that some unwisely take and have to go over the ground again). The hint was taken, and as a consequence she has lately written me (Sept. 20) from Hale Park, Salisbury. "I have had no return of cough or expectoration. I believe that coming to you in time saved me from serious consequences. I am very grateful to you."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

GRATEFUL THANKS FOR DONATIONS RECEIVED THUS FAR!

I believe it will be a source of gratification to the Readers of THE CHRISTIAN to learn that the Appeal for CONTRIBUTIONS to close this year's work without the incubus of any outstanding liability, is being RESPONDED TO MOST KINDLY.

5,000 Meals have had to be provided every week, for the maintenance of the Inmates, and the Homes, and the Open-All-Night Refuge; and all other expenses, for Clothing, &c., have been correspondingly great. While at times during the year the contributions have fallen far short of the expenses, yet the work has been carried on irrespective of any fluctuations of income.

£500 IN CONTRIBUTIONS from December 17th to 31st will NOW MEET ALL NECESSITIES. The Reader is asked to Contribute.

Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, THE CHRISTIAN Office, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., will as usual, receive Donations; or they may be sent direct to

THE BENEVOLENT OR STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Treasurer, Alderman R. N. Fowler M.P. (Ex-Lord Mayor); J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman; Mr. Ex-Sheriff Clarence Smith, Hon. Secretary.

For ninety-nine years this Institution has visited and relieved the destitute sick, by an entirely unpaid agency, consisting of over 250 Christian men and women. Many sad cases have constantly to be passed over from want of funds.

The Committee will be thankful for the Society being remembered in the testamentary arrangements of the benevolent.—Office of the Society, 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

B. H. GERRANS, Secretary.

REDUCED GENTLEWOMEN.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN.

SIR,—As Hon. Sec. to the Luther Memorial Home, I shall feel very grateful if you will allow me through your columns, which are ever advocating the claims of suffering humanity, to plead for a share of the pecuniary aid so liberally forthcoming at this season. I will not distress your readers by dwelling on the numerous cases of poverty, and consequent privation, brought before me, by those who have "seen better days." Since the above Home was proposed, a year since, two hundred pounds have been received. This sum being insufficient, I hopefully appeal for a shilling donation from each of your readers, none of whom would be poorer for the small gift. A few thousand shillings would soon realize the sum required, and cheer many a lonely heart with a ray of hope, that their last days will not be spent within the dreaded portals of a Workhouse. A little of the sympathy which was the burden and passion of our blessed Lord's existence, "I will not send them away empty, lest they faint by the way," would speedily supply the small sum needed to establish this great want.

Contributions thankfully received by the Treasurer, Miss JULIA FOX, 54, Kensington park-road, Ladbroke-square, London; or by the Hon. Sec., Miss CORKE, 120, Ledbury-road, Bayswater, London.

CHRISTMAS DINNER and Coals

or the Blind Poor.—The Committee of the Indigent Blind Visiting Society, founded 1834, for the visitation, relief, and education of the Blind, earnestly appeal for aid to give nearly 1,000 of the most needy of the Blind Poor the means of obtaining a Christmas dinner for themselves and families. Also to give coals during the winter to those whose sad condition strongly calls for sympathy and help. Contributions, however small, will be gratefully received by W. C. Lester, Secretary, Office, 27, Red Lion-square, W.C.; Bankers, Messrs. Williams, Deacon & Co., 20, Birchin-lane, E.C.

DR. PASSALENTI'S MISSION to the Italians in London.—It is earnestly requested that all moneys in favour of the above Mission be sent to Dr. PASSALENTI, 10, Wells-street, Gray's Inn-road. Clothing for poor, or bazaar, are thankfully received by Mrs. PARKER, 10, Wells-street, Gray's Inn-road, W.C.

Commercial Road, E.,

AND

TRAINING AND CONVALESCENT HOME, THE LIMES, FELTHAM.

DEAR FRIENDS,

The present is a time of extreme need. I therefore most earnestly solicit contributions, feeling sure that I have only to make our position known, to enlist your aid and sympathy; especially as I plead for the helpless little ones who fill our homes, and who but for the shelter afforded would be in circumstances too sad to contemplate. May He to whom the silver and the gold belong, incline your hearts to send speedy and liberal aid, so that we may, as in former times, realise that the Lord is our help in time of trouble. Yours in the Master's service,

MARIE HILTON.

Clothing and Toys for Christmas will be gladly received, and may be sent to the above address.

Cheques and postal orders may be sent, addressed to

MRS. MARIE HILTON,

EDUCATION.—A Lady in South

Hampstead (whose Daughters have a Preparatory School for Little Boys) will after Christmas have vacancies for two in the house, boarders or weekly. Numbers being limited, watchful care and home comforts are assured. Term commences January 21st.—T., 166, Belsize-road, N.W.

TO GODLY PARENTS.—The undermentioned (who is in no way connected with the school) is desirous of recommending an old-established YOUNG GENTLEMEN'S BOARDING SCHOOL, DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED FACING THE SEA on the South Coast, a short run from London, in which a thorough and first-class Education is given, based upon the teaching of the Holy Scriptures.

It is one of the few remaining schools in which the power of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ influences the hearts and conduct of the pupils.

The success, happiness, and training of the Boys have been so remarkable in this school that a BOOK OF TESTIMONIALS GIVEN BY THE PARENTS, together with the papers of Examinations passed and Honours gained, should be read to appreciate results so unusual. Two Vice-Chancellors have placed their wards as pupils in the school. Reference kindly permitted to DR. THORN, Paddington, London.

MT. RADFORD SCHOOL, Exeter.—During the last ten years pupils have obtained upwards of 150 certificates in the Oxford, Cambridge, College of Preceptors', and London University Examinations. Of these, twenty-two passed in honours, and twelve obtained prizes. The Word of God is made the sole basis of a careful Christian training. References to parents of past and present pupils

YOUNG LADIES' WESLEYAN COLLEGE
(PENSIONNAT EVANGELIQUE),
NIMES, SOUTH OF FRANCE.

This establishment, situated in one of the finest towns of the south of France, has been in existence for forty years, and has deservedly obtained a high reputation for its scholastic efficiency. It has trained 800 pupils, 200 of whom, before leaving, obtained the Government diploma. The premises, comprising an extensive garden, are the property of the French Methodist Conference. The moral and spiritual direction of the school is entrusted by the Conference to a minister who resides on the spot.

The sanitary condition of France is now as good as ever, and the climate of Nimes is remarkably dry and healthy, the winter being always short, and the spring and autumn long and pleasant. Many delicate young ladies have found a residence at Nimes the means of invigorating their constitutions for life.

Terms: Board and tuition for the scholastic year (10 months), £40, or with a separate bed-room, £50. The next term will commence at the beginning of January, 1885. Application for admission to be made to Pastor O. PRUNIER, Principal and Chaplain, 1, Rue de Sauve, Nimes, France.

Pastor Jules Guiton, Rue Thiers, St. Pierre lés Calais, and Pastor J. P. Cook, 16, Rue Demours, Paris, would be disposed to meet the young ladies at the station in Calais and in Paris, the two only places where they have to stop, so as to relieve them from any difficulty in travelling from Calais to Nimes.

THE CONVERSION OF CHILDREN.

BY REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND, M.A.,

Author of

"Gathered Lambs," "Jesus' Lambs," "The Better Life," "Little Ones in the Fold," "Familiar Talks with the Children," "Tracts for the Children," &c.

Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 2s. 6d.

REVIEWS.

"Many remarkable facts are here given, which deserve the attention of those especially who are incredulous as to the early age at which children may begin to live consciously a Christian life."
Evangelical Christendom.

"We commend the book very heartily to the prayerful attention of all parents and teachers.—The Freeman.

"We are quite sure that this book is well calculated to encourage effort and stimulate the Church to diligence in this direction."—The Methodist.

"This book is written for adults, and specially for those who are engaged in Sabbath-school teaching, or other work for the soul's good of children. . . . . Wise and precious counsels are presented to parents and guardians of youth for the goodly up-bringing of the children committed to their care."—Christian Week.

"We devoutly wish that by some means or other a copy could be placed in the hands of every Sunday-school superintendent and every pastor of a church."
Penuel.

"A careful perusal of the testimony here given must convince every unprejudiced mind that in our days, as in the days of old, God perfects praise out of the mouths of babes and sucklings."
Woman's Work.

"A most useful book, dealing with a most important subject in a masterly way. The whole subject of the early conversion of children is carefully considered by one whose experience in this special line entitles him to speak with authority. We heartily commend it to our readers, and especially to parents, Sunday-school teachers, and all who have to do with children."—Christian Progress.

II.—The Sea-Gulls—A White Coat.
III.—The Peacocks—Fine Feathers.
IV.—The Cuckoo—Singing in Spring-Time.
V.—The Sparrows—"Five for Two Farthings."
VI.—The Pelican—"For those I Love."
VII.—The Raven—A Miracle every Morning.
VIII. The Eagle and the Eagle's Nest.
IX.—The Ark and the Dove—"Weary."
X.—"Under His Wings."

EXTRACT FROM CHAP. II., "THE SEA-GULLS."

"Often when I am on the beach, or even from my window, I look across the Bay; and I can just see a speck gleaming against the grey sands, or the surf-beaten sullen-looking cliffs of Howth beyond; and I know at once what the speck is by its whiteness. At other times when the storm has come, and the waves are sweeping over the rocks, I see a light speck upon the dark cloud curtain; and I know it is a brave little Sea-gull in its white coat. So when we have given ourselves to Jesus, it should be easy for those round about us to see that we have. When, like the bird on the sands, we are doing our lowly work, the white robe should be visible; and in sorrow and trouble the whiteness should gleam as it did in the lives of those men of whom we are told in the New Testament that others "took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus." Small Books suitable for Christmas.

RUTH'S CHRISTMAS; OR, WHAT CAN A GIRL DO?

BY L. F. P. M., Author of "Jane Arnold," &c.

16 Pages, Tract Size. Price 1s. per dozen; 7s. 6d. per 100.

A very pleasing and profitable Christmas story. It tells of how the words and example of a little girl were the means of bringing peace, comfort, and blessing to a home that had previously been cheerless, wretched, and sinful.

ECHOES OF THE BELLS.

BY ISA BELL, Author of "Called at Even," &c.

Royal 32mo. 32 Pages. Price Twopence.

Also published as a Tract. Price 1s. per dozen.

"Christmas Bells! Let us hear what they say! Let us try to catch a faint refrain of their mysterious melodies! If we listen intently, it may be that some echo of their music will mingle with the clashing discords of earth through all the coming year, until the silver notes peal out afresh with the return of the ever-blessed time 'when Christ was but a child.'"—EXTRACT.

THAT MAN SAVED MY LIFE.

BY ANNA SHIPTON, Author of "Waiting Hours," &c.

Price 1s. per dozen.

"I knew no one was waiting for me at the station where I must soon alight; no one even expected me; but the sadness was but the background to a fairer picture, as the shadows of earth are needed to bring forth the brightness of heaven's beauty. I knew that every setting sun was a station nearer my home that gleamed through the midst of the coming dawn; that there I should find all I loved; and there I should behold His glory, and dwell with Him who was upholding me in this hour of weakness and weariness."—EXTRACT.

CHRISTMAS CAROL. THERE DWELT IN OLD JUDEA.

"There dwelt in Old Judea
A maiden fair to see—
The mother mild, and undefiled
Of a blessèd babe was she.
Oh, Noël, sing Noël,
And merry be alway,
For Christ was born in the early morn,
All on a Christmas Day."

Price 1s. per dozen; or 6s. per 100.

THERE CAME A LITTLE CHILD TO EARTH.

"There came a little Child to earth
Long ago;
And the angels of God proclaimed His birth
High and low.
Out in the night, so calm and still,
Their song was heard,
For they knew that the Child on Bethlehem's hill
Was Christ the Lord."

Price 1s. 4d. per 100.

(Musical Leaflets, No. 3.)

A CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S GREETING TO "BLUE RIBBONS"

A REAL CHRIST.

A NEW YEAR'S ADDRESS

BY REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

Price 1s. per dozen.

"And if I weep for sin, shall I not also rejoice that I am without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing, through the Blood and Righteousness of Jesus Christ? Sin is real; let the Christ be real."—EXTRACT.

EVERLASTING FLOWERS; OR, MY NEW YEAR'S GIFT.

BY ANNA SHIPTON, Author of "Tell Jesus," &c.

Price 1s. per dozen.

"I said, 'Lord, give me a New Year's gift. Give Thou!' My thoughts ran over the spiritual gifts I needed, but did not pause there. 'Give me a soul, Lord; give me H——'s soul for my New Year's gift. I was desirous of everlasting flowers for my Saviour's crown."—Extract.

THE AUXILIARY BIBLE.

(AUTHORISED VERSION.)

The object proposed in the preparation of "The Auxiliary Bible" is to deepen in the soul the present value of Holy Scripture for the exigencies of our times and circumstances. All around is stamped with change and imperfection, save the Word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever. We believe, therefore, that the help afforded will be of permanent value, and will render substantial aid in the study of Scriptures.

"THE AUXILIARY BIBLE" has been prepared in Three sizes, each size in various styles of Binding, as follows:

SMALL 8vo. EDITION. Size 5¼ by 4 inches.
No. 1. In Morocco, plain, gilt edges, 5s. 6d.
No. 2. In fine Turkey Morocco limp, circuit edges, 7s. 6d.
No. 3. In finest Morocco, kid lined, best binding, 11s. 6d.

MEDIUM SIZE EDITION. Size 6½ by 4 inches.
No. 4. In Morocco, plain, gilt edges, 8s. 6d.
No. 5. In fine Morocco limp, circuit edges, 10s. 6d.
No. 6. In finest Morocco, kid lined, best binding, 15s. 6d.

LARGE TYPE EDITION. Size 7½ by 5 inches.
No. 7. In Morocco, plain, gilt edges, 12s. 6d.
No. 8. In fine Turkey Morocco limp, circuit edges, 17s. 6d.
No. 9. In finest Turkey Morocco, kid lined, best binding, 25s. 6d.

Special Editions of the AUXILIARY BIBLE, on India Paper, extremely thin and light:—
No. 10. In Pearl type—size, about 6¼ inches long, 3¾ inches broad, and ¾ inch thick; weight, about 10 oz. Price 16s. 6d.
No. 11. In Ruby type—size about 6¾ inches long, 4¼ inches broad, and ⅞ inch thick; weight, about 12 oz. Price 21s. 6d.

The Christian.

THE END OF THE YEAR.

By Rev. WILLIAM GUEST, F.G.S.

THE words put into our lips by the Lord—"Thy kingdom come"—are not only an instruction, but a prophecy. These passing years are assuredly bringing us nearer that blessed time when the "will of God will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." This, however, we must bear in mind,—the preparations for that kingdom come not with observation. We must watch the signs with the wisdom that comes from the silent waiting upon God. Hope, with her eagle eye, must, amid the developments of the mystery of iniquity, trace that thread of heavenly light and promise which is always moving towards the one great consummation—man's full redemption, the manifestation of the sons of God, the deliverance of creation from its bondage of corruption, and the glory of the Eternal Word which "all flesh shall see together."

On the other hand, the kingdom of Satan is one of confusion. Malign powers come not "but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy." These potencies of evil have always worked in the direction of disbelief in Almighty God. They have made society chaotic; and amidst tumults, alienations, and impendings of destruction, faith in God often wavers.

GOD'S PROVIDENTIAL GOVERNMENT.

The object of the following paper is to indicate that on Divine Providence, as controlling all these controversies and agitations, the patient waiters may calmly stay themselves. The writer would encourage the faithful, who in many lands read this journal, so that they may fulfil their high calling to prepare in the waste desert of this world a highway for their God.*

The Christian centuries have been marked by times of faith, with its triumphs; of priestly ambition, with its withering blight upon the Christian cause; of wild barbarity, with its retributive judgments; of superstition, with its corruptions; of saintliness, with its lofty self-denials; of Reformation struggles lifting up the gates for a new era; and of Evangelical Protestantism, with its world-wide philanthropy and conquests. A Divine purpose has been pursued through these historical movements: the "firm path of God through the stream of ages." The mark of our era is an unparalleled intellectual activity. If this has brought on the world floods of rash speculations, of vain-boastings and unbelief, it has witnessed, nevertheless, a controlling and direction whereby there have proceeded wondrous confirmations of the Faith. Let me glance at one or two of these.

THE RECENTLY DISCOVERED MS.

In this connection the most remarkable event of the year has been the appearance in leading Reviews in Europe and America of translations of a manuscript which had been found in a library in Constantinople, and which, on the high authority of Dr. Lightfoot, is dated between A.D. 80—110. Now these years have hitherto been the most indistinct in Church history. This invaluable relic of Christian antiquity is about the size of the Epistle to the Galatians. It is mainly an instruction to converts to Christianity on the conduct of life; it is termed the "Teaching of Apostles;" and was discovered by a Greek Bishop, now Metropolitan of Nicomedia, and who, in the words of Professor Stokes, combines with the spirit of Eusebius the learning that is abreast with the latest European scholarship.

The value of this document is in the vindication it gives of the opinion that maintained the authenticity and genuineness of the New Testament writings. Most unexpectedly, and out of a shrouded period, there comes the very witness that was wanted. The manual quotes two of the Gospels, and refers to the language of three of the Epistles of Paul and one of Peter.

The fact has most important bearings, and the importance can scarcely be exaggerated. It proves that at a very early date the New Testament writings were in the hands of the Christians, and that their authority was then recognised. The rationalistic criticism that dated these writings a hundred years later is discredited. "It is a fresh nail," to quote the Bishop of Durham at the Carlisle Congress, "driven in the coffin of the Tübengen speculation."*

What was the effect of the inventive imaginations and hostile criticism that gave a mythical origin to the New Testament Scriptures, has been shown during the year by the Memoir of the Princess Alice. In 1870 this gifted lady was brought under the influence of Strauss. Not only did all her Christian hopes "crumble away like dust," but she came to an abyss, on the awful verge of which she doubted even the existence of God (v. page 385). Three years after, her palace was suddenly darkened by an acute sorrow. In that hour of anguish, through God's love to her, she cast off those false conclusions of critical speculation, and returned to the trust of happier years. Thanks be unto God! that form of unbelief cannot again shatter the peace of mortals, nor shake the foundations of our faith. Learning has never conferred a vaster blessing upon the world than when, as pre-eminently in the year now ending, it has placed on an unassailable basis the witness and revelation of the way of man's salvation.

Intellectual activity is confirming the truthfulness of the Old Testament Scriptures. The witness to the accuracy of the historical statements of the Bible may not prove its supernatural character. But we should err if we made light of the value of this evidence as removing out of the way a stone of stumbling. Let us note the hand of God in the fact that scholars and topographists were never, as now, making elucidation of the early Biblical records. Monuments, mounds, tombs, temples, bricks, mummies, and places unexplored for ages, are vindicating as never before the histories of the Old Testament; they are shown to have been written by men who were well acquainted with the scenes they describe.

THE EXPLORATIONS IN PALESTINE.

I have carefully followed the Palestine explorations, and have been filled with thankful astonishment at the number and minuteness of the confirmations which have been brought to light. Even in such points as "going up," or "going down" to an obscure position, the exactitude of the historical Scriptures is apparent. As to Exodus and Numbers, the "Egypticity" of the records is brought home by late explorers in that region to every candid person. The storehouses built by the Israelites are discovered; yea, the very bricks they used; some of them made with straw; some without any straw at all; some with mere Nile mud, or fragments of reed, as if they had been gathered in an expediency of distress. Oh, the wonder-working Providence of God in this age! The very groan of the children of Israel reaches our own times.

It is needful that we should remind ourselves of these things. Amid the excitement of politics, and the din of current events, they are likely to be overlooked. At a time when worldly society is more Godless than religious people can conceive, and when the holy Scriptures are made to point jests in a way inexpressibly revolting, God is giving wisdom, learning, and endurance to investigators, whereby the faithful may be assured of the certainty of that which they have believed. Yea, more; when upheavals threaten us; when events of widest import are foreshadowed; when men, having lost faith in scepticisms, resort to lying oracles, God is in mercy ordaining that we shall enter on the last fifteen years of this great century with the removal of causes of doubt, and with faith strengthened and confirmed in the rectitude of the writings of the Old and New Testaments. The all-availing sufficiency of those writings, as the very oracles of God, will be more and more recognised.

SCIENTIFIC INQUIRY.

In relation to Scientific inquiry, no event of the year possesses to me more interest

* May I ask,—Is not the interpretation too restricted which confines the sublime prediction in Isaiah xl. 1—5 to the First Coming of the Lord, and is it not better to regard the verses as embracing the whole Messianic period with the Second Advent?

* I cannot forbear quoting in a note the report given in the Andover Review for last month, by a gentleman in Constantinople. He received from Bishop Bryennios an account of his discovery of the Teaching manuscript. When the nature of it was discerned by the Bishop, he said: "Something seemed to strike me as lightning. I was all of a tremble. This, this, this," he exclaimed, with rising emphasis, "must be the book that so many ancient fathers quote, the book that was lost, and that the Church mourns over to this day. 'I have found it!' I shouted like Archimedes."

than a meeting, called in the spring, in the large hall of the Society of Arts by the Council of the Victoria Institute. Principal, now Sir William, Dawson had just returned from a geological exploration of the valley of the Nile and of the region of Lebanon. He was met by a large number of distinguished scientists. During twenty years I have rarely seen so many eminent geologists assembled. Principal Dawson maintained that there was nothing whatever in the ancient sites he had for some months been examining that justified the extreme views of man's antiquity that had been held. He set forth observations also as to diluvian action corresponding with "a deluge" of waters. But the chief interest was in the addresses that followed the lecture. It was manifest that the spirit, so hostile to revelation, which domineered over science a few years ago, was no longer at the front. The tone of the discussion concerning the age of man was remarkable for its freedom from dogmatism, its distrust of conclusions on inadequate grounds, its truth-seeking candour, and its air of modesty and caution.

Christian men cannot be too thankful for the unquestionable change which has passed over the scientific mind, and which I ventured to forecast in these pages a few years ago, in a paper headed "The Turn of the Tide." The new spirit was shown at this year's meeting of the British Association. There was the devotional gathering of some of the foremost members. A Canadian speaks of not a few of them to whom "personal religion was clearly a great reality." Such rash utterances as those of Dr. Tyndall at Belfast, which attributed to matter the promise and potency of all things, were repudiated. Sir William Thomson's able address went to indicate that the backward research to the "Beginning," showed that not matter, but spiritual activity originated the visible universe; and the brilliant paper of Dr. Dallenger, the great Methodist microscopist, led up to the conclusion, which is adverse to a supposed case of Professor Huxley, that the "Living only can give rise to the living." We ought surely to give thanks that between science and religion there is now approaching a grand reconcilement.

We see this even in the speculative philosophy of Mr. Herbert Spencer. He has been teaching that all sciences are united by subtle relations; that all cosmical events are under one law; that the energies of mind reveal one all-controlling energy; that the past and present are in closest connection: that, in short, there is a sublime unity in nature, and one all-pervasive and transcendent system. We ought not to be unmindful of these independent philosophical conclusions towards that which the Bible affirms. In a recent controversy Mr. Spencer used most remarkable language. Discarding materialistic phraseology, he speaks of a solution of the great enigma of Agnosticism: of an "Ultimate Reality transcending all human thought;" "of one absolute certainty, that he [the inquirer] is ever in the presence of an Infinite and Eternal Energy, from which all things proceed." Assuredly we should notice such significant admissions.

LISTEN TO GOD.

The great word which comes to us at the end of the year is that of Isaiah,—"Keep silence," or "Listen to Me in silence, O islands; and let the people renew their strength." Hush for a few days this unceasing talk. Pause, as the year closes, amid this pressure of multitudinous engagements. Mark God's movements on the earth. See how He is taking the wise of this age in their own skilfulness. Note how He is controlling a learning that gloried in a designation which ignored Him, and making it a witness on his behalf. Ye thousands of preachers, be alone with God as the last fifteen years of the century hasten to begin their portentous disclosures. Let your attitude be, "My soul is silently waiting unto God." Blessed silence! All true strength grows in thee! In that silence you will hear the Infinite saying, "The people are wearied, because, in interminable words, they do not find Me. Your myriad schemes, and reformations, and projects, and disputations, are abortive when they do not seek to bring men to the Fountain-Head of strength. Amidst this endless talk, mortals are despairing, and a hopelessness of effectual remedy is seizing the earth. Cease your stream of confused sound. Turn ye yourselves to Me in silent waiting, in speechless but believing expectation, as the year closes its record. Learn how I am working for man's deliverance. There is no Saviour beside Me. Let your speech articulate My thought. Listen ye to Me, and a wearied age will renew its strength."

In a paper for the New Year, I will, all being well, point out two dangers in relation to that renewal.

THE DISMAL SCIENCE.

By Rev. S. BORTON BROWN.

I AM reminded by a recent article in The Christian, that once upon a time, in his great horror, and in his gruff way, Carlyle called Political Economy "the dismal science;" and he was quite right. It may be a science, but it certainly is a dismal science, and one of the lower and utterly earthly sciences, which cannot even pretend to any higher and spiritual principles. In fact, it would be laughed at if it did. The sciences of Anatomy, Botany, Fortification, and Physics, these and many others, though true sciences, have nothing whatever to do with those deeper living laws relating to love. But in these social questions, which are coming up so pressingly just now, we must consider principles of spiritual life, which go far beyond any mere dismal sciences. Political economy has no doubt everything to do with the science of money-making, the laws of wealth, supply and demand, labour and wages, the material laws of social and national prosperity; but it takes no account, and can take none, as a science, of mercy and love, and that is what we do specially want in these days, even in trade and commerce.

According to this "dismal science," men may go to his satanic majesty at last, so long as these beautiful laws of supply and demand are observed. Of course, political economy does not pretend to have anything to do with the sermon on the mount, for instance, or the laws of Christ. I am truly sick of these efforts to reduce Christianity to scientific principles, as though it did not marvellously transcend all such methods. Not that I can despise science in its own particular region; and He who is the Author of scientific laws in their own special realms of materialistic symmetry and order, is the Author confessedly of spiritual and celestial forces and principles, which go far beyond any such regions. So little has political economy to do with these higher matters of social responsibility and humanity, that we could even imagine the most successful hard and fast money-grubber, with no Christian principles or spiritual qualities at all, reducing trade to pure science, with no soul whatever in it, and such a one might know that he could not succeed if he contravened one of its laws.

As much as love is beyond all law, so are the higher humanities and divinities beyond all man-made political economies. And just because Ruskin has tried to frame a political economy on Christian principles, he has been laughed at by Manchester men for his pains and fanaticism. Confessedly the law was given by legal legislators, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ. But cannot trade and commerce be regulated by grace and truth, as well as by law? You cannot measure the immeasurable; you cannot sell love by the pint measure, or gauge compassion by the plummet-line of the builder. Go in for political economy if that can do the work, but go in for something better if it cannot. But confessedly political economy falls short. When will it be discerned that Christ came to deepen, broaden, and extend the region of our humanities, to put a new spirit into all things, to put love and greatness, to put mercy and justice, into everything?

The whole range of political economy contains no fruit of the Spirit, of love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; yet confessedly against such there is no law. These go infinitely beyond the limits of any political economy. Would it be weak, however, and unscientific, to introduce a few of these fruits into trade; or are the laws of supply and demand so inexorable that the less of love and gentleness you have the better, the less of mercy the more scientific? At that rate, possibly it would be better to have cast-iron workmen and reduce the whole of trade to machinery. And carried out to its extreme limit, political economy might easily take no account of souls, or even of the stomachs of society, though that latter is impossible, as even the iron law of wages is obliged to reckon how much it will take to feed a labourer in order to reckon how cheaply goods can be produced.

I must say, without finding fault with it, that this whole science proceeds on selfish principles to reach its end—the material prosperity of the greatest number. But does it, or can it, take notice of the sick, the infirm, the over-worked? Is it elastic enough to deal with the labourer as a Christian? Even if it promotes emigration it is not because it regards the welfare of the man, but it is because it relieves congested districts; it gives free scope to supply and demand; it is good for trade! The veriest infidel can be a good political economist, according to the present state of its scientific formularies. And one who had the mark of the beast could adopt its laws. In fact, the merely secular principle is the exact equivalent of the scientist who rests in the threefold worldly number 666, instead of the perfect number seven, which represents the Divine as well as human.

I verily believe that in the grinding and cruel competition, in the industrial anarchies, in the feverish hurry and pressure of trade of the present day, we are coming rapidly to this mark, which represents the complete divorce of Christianity and commerce. Soon, I fear, we shall see an attempt made to prevent any fair buying or selling, or any manufacture, unless we consent to adopt the mark which acknowledges the purely secular principle, "buy in the cheapest and sell in the dearest market; get all you can, and with all your getting take no account of Christ." Christ came to bring into the world a much higher principle than the ordinary one of getting, and of becoming prosperous.

He came rather to introduce the principle of giving, of sacrifice, of making Himself poor that we might be rich; and his disciples, specially, should be an order of men who do renounce all selfish principles, and follow Christ. Ah! this is a horrible doctrine, which would indeed cause confusion in trade and commerce, and how could a man ever get on? Well, count the cost.

We will say this, however, to those who vaunt political economy, that it is a selfish science, and it cannot afford to take into consideration as a science either of God or of true humanity; it has rather to do with "getting on," not at all with sacrifice! But, in these days of the Christian dispensation, we must decide which we will choose. If we cannot conduct our business on Christian principles, on human sympathy, and on true sacrifice, we had better die and get out of the world altogether.

THE BOOK OF PSALMS.

(Concluded from our last.)

CONSIDER how comparatively little had been told of the promised Messiah before the Psalms were written! He was to be the Seed of the woman, and would bruise the serpent's head, a Descendant of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; of the tribe of Judah, He was to be Shiloh; a Star and Sceptre, a Prophet and a King, God's Anointed (1 Sam. ii. 10). That was all!

In addition to this the Psalms foretold that the Messiah would be the eternal, only-begotten Son of God; David's Lord at the same time as David's Son; that He would come and delight to do God's will; the Holy One, meek yet mighty; that He would be betrayed by his own familiar friend, which did eat of his bread; that all his acquaintance would forsake Him; that false witnesses would rise up, laying to his charge things He knew not.

The Psalms also prophesied of the piercing of his hands and feet; of his surroundings and anguish upon the Cross; the taunts of the bystanders; the soldiers parting his garments among them, and casting lots upon his vesture; his awful thirst when they offered Him vinegar to drink, and his cry of agony; his burial and resurrection; his ascension, viz., "God is gone up with a shout, the Lord with the sound of a trumpet." "Lift up your heads, O ye gates; and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of Glory shall come in." "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit Thou on my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool." They prophesied that, having ascended up on high, leading captivity captive, He would send his Holy Spirit—i.e., give gifts unto men (compare Psalm lxviii. 18 with 1 Cor. xii. 4, 8—11, and Eph. iv.); that He Himself would be their Shepherd, their Priest for ever, after the order of Melchizedek.

Further, that He will come again, the second time as King of kings, to reign in peace and righteousness upon God's Holy Hill of Sion; that then "the heathen will be for his inheritance, the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession." "He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth;" and "his Name shall endure for ever: his Name shall be continued as long as the sun: and men shall be blessed in Him: all nations shall call Him blessed."

This marvellous catalogue would be incomplete did it not include the Psalmist's eminently prophetical warning, "Kiss the Son, lest He be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in Him."

Is it wonderful, seeing the prophetic character of the Psalter, that it is the Old Testament Book most often quoted in the New Testament? We have seventy-six direct quotations from it. Is it wonderful that our Lord silenced the Jews' murmurings against Himself by repeating its language—that in it He pointed out to his disciples the things concerning Himself, and that at the institution of his Supper one of its hymns was sung; that the Apostle Paul should exhort the Ephesian and Colossian Christians "in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs to sing and make melody in their hearts to the Lord"? Christian education in Syria began with the Book of Psalms, and in the early days of the Church this book was committed to memory that the Psalms might enliven the social intercourse of Christians and be their solace in times of trial and persecution." Dr. Benjamin Davies has said: "They employed the Psalms not only in their religious assemblies, of which use we find probable mention in 1 Cor. xiv. 26, but also at their meals and before retiring to rest."

The religious teaching contained in this inspired book is so advanced that while

> "The old order changeth, yielding place to new,
> And God fulfils Himself in many ways,"

these words abide and will abide to express the heart's desires of the Christian fully as much as they ever did those of Jews. Dare we not say that we see the Doctrine of the Trinity here in germ? Are not God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, all made mention of? and their various, yet united, work in redeeming mankind set forth? As we know the Psalms abound in references to the two first Persons of the Trinity, it will be sufficient to point attention to David's prayer, "Take not thy Holy Spirit from me." Of this the Rev. Peter Young says: "He did not indeed know the full doctrine of the Holy Ghost, and his mysterious indwelling, but he knew his need of Divine help; he knew that he had fallen because he had not rested on that help; and, therefore, he prays that he may not be deprived of it. His words are familiar and very suitable to us, who have been made temples of the Holy Ghost, but are continually grieving Him by our sins, and provoking Him to depart from us."

It has been truly said we find in the Psalms "an acknowledgment of the Gospel way of Salvation, which consists in penitential contrition, pardon, and newness of life." Nor is the doctrine of free grace lacking: we have it in Psalm xxxii. Then, again, though the Psalter was compiled for liturgical purposes, and consequently has in it many allusions to the Jewish Ritual, the Psalms which most fervently breathe love for the outward forms of worship, "contain," remarks Canon Cook, "the very strongest declaration to be found in the Bible of the absolute worthlessness of all ceremonial observances . . . though offered . . . in perfect accordance with the declared will of God, excepting so far as they are expressions of a heart purified by repentance, eschewing evil, and full of gratitude for spiritual grace."

We need never wrest the meaning of a Psalm to make it appear prophetic of the Messiah. Suffice it that the unprophetic Psalms are the utterances of men "subject to like passions as we are;" whose experience tallied with our own, whose hope, whose only hope, of deliverance from the power of sin was, as our own is, in God. Types can never fully represent the Antitype, any more than shadows can the substance by which they are cast. The Psalms which are not Messianic "are," as Dr. Angus writes, "models of acceptable devotion. . . . The Christian Church, therefore, takes the Psalms as her own language, or as the language of her Lord;" and even in the imprecatory Psalms she understands the writer in the spirit as speaking of the enemies of Christ and his Church.

The following is a final quotation from Canon Cook's Introduction to the Book of Psalms in the Speaker's Commentary: "The Psalter emptied of Christ would still be a collection of lyric poems of admirable beauty, breathing a pure and lofty devotion, representing in vivid colours the events and persons of the most remarkable people in the world's history. It would retain its position among the noblest and most interesting products of human genius. But to the Christian, as such, it would have no voice, no meaning; losing its highest and most distinctive characteristic, it would forfeit its claims upon his reverence and love."

In conclusion, we fervently repeat the Doxology of the 72nd Psalm, that grandly Messianic Psalm, prophetic of the Second Advent: "Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, Who only doeth wondrous things. And blessed be his glorious name for ever: and let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Amen and Amen."

A DECEMBER CHRIST.

WHATEVER foundation there may be for placing the birth of Christ at its present generally conceded date, one thing is certain, that we have a Saviour who is a comfort and refuge in the wintry seasons of life as well as a companion and guide in the periods when the flowers bloom and the zephyr fans. Christ is no fair weather Saviour. He is a very present help when the blast is sharp, the sky clouded, the hopes blighted, and every prospect covered with ice and snow.

How our poor, suffering humanity should greet this Christ as it keeps the anniversary of His birth! He has come to the destitute, to the wandering, to the fainting, to those cold and naked, shrunken with sickness, chilled with disappointment, immersed in bereavement, and bending over open graves. He comes with a "balm for every wound, a cordial for every fear," with a robe for every penitent, a home for every wanderer, and a throne for every child. He is indeed a "December Christ." Let us bring Him our hearts and ourselves, with our gold and frankincense and myrrh, and join hand in hand as we unite in the chorus of song—

> "We love to sing around our King,
> And hail Him 'Blessed Jesus';
> For there's no word ear ever heard,
> So dear, so sweet as Jesus."

DERBY.—Rev. Dr. Morris, of the Church Parochial Mission Society, revisited Derby last week to hold services for believers, with the view of seeking Power from on high to deepen the work which had commenced during the Mission conducted by him in Christ Church parish last May. The honest heart-searching which attended these services was very noticeable. Many were led to a full realisation of God's gifts in Christ. The Superintendent of the Sunday-schools testified that the work in the schools had been a totally different thing since the May Mission, and an Instruction Class then started has been well attended every Sunday afternoon. The attendance at all the Bible-classes and Prayer-meetings has been sustained with marked blessing upon the whole congregation.

WORK AMONGST NEGLECTED YOUTH.—2.

REMINISCENCES

By A PRESBYTERIAN ELDER.

ORDER, usually regarded as heaven's first law, and so essential for the proper carrying on of all branches of Christian work, having, in a measure, been established, the way was open for the teachers giving undivided attention to the religious instruction and moral training of their classes. Historical subjects from the Old and New Testaments, such as "The Deluge," "David and Goliath," "Daniel in the den of lions," "Christ walking on the sea, and stilling the storm," and "The conversion of the Apostle Paul," were at once introduced, and found exceedingly useful, not only in securing attention and awakening interest, but also in giving the children a favourable impression of the Bible, as a most interesting as well as the most earnest and useful of all books.

It has been frequently stated that one great drawback to the successful carrying on of Sabbath-school work amongst destitute children has been the difficulty experienced in securing and retaining the services of well qualified teachers. Such, however, was not the case to any perceptible extent in the work with which we had the happiness of being connected. Vacancies in the ranks of our workers, unless caused by death or removal, were of infrequent occurrence, and the filling of these did not occasion much inconvenience or trouble. This may be partly due to the care taken by those in charge of the schools in the selection and appointment of teachers, only those being considered eligible who had undergone a saving change, and were prepared, in the language of Scripture, to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ.

With regard to the state of religion in the town where our operations were commenced, it may be mentioned that in connection with special services held by the "Scottish Evangelist," a short time previously, there had been not a few tokens of the presence and power of the Spirit of God. Conversions were also more frequent in the regular services of the sanctuary than they had been for several preceding years, and Christian workers quickened and led to engage more heartily and thoroughly in various branches of active Christian service; whilst in the experience of many it seemed as if the windows of heaven had been opened and the very atmosphere, where God's work was carried on, consciously charged with the influences and powers of the world to come. It need therefore occasion no surprise when it is stated that from the very outset of our labours there were few weeks without special manifestations of the Lord's saving grace. Special opportunities were afforded anxious inquirers of having private interviews with their teachers, which were largely taken advantage of, with, we have every reason to believe, the happiest results. Many of those who had found Christ made themselves very useful by inducing their companions to attend the school, and acquainting their teachers when they knew of any of them being in an anxious or inquiring state.

In looking over my list of memorabilia, it is pleasing to observe the very considerable number of cases there are in which the scholars who received benefit in the school were made directly or indirectly a means of blessing to their friends. Take the following interesting and affecting case. One evening the teacher of a class of girls was speaking with much earnestness on the duty and privilege of prayer, when a member of the class, with evident emotion, asked if God would hear a little girl's prayer. The teacher in a very kindly manner replied that He would, and referred her to what God had Himself said about hearing the prayer of the poor and needy. A change from that evening was observable in the young inquirer. Not very long afterwards she was laid down on a bed of sickness from which she was never again to rise. During her illness she was frequently visited by her teacher, and they had many sweet seasons of communion together, in reading the Scriptures, and in talking of the love of Jesus and the glories of the better land. Her progress in the divine life was very marked.

On one occasion, not long before her end, a somewhat affecting interview took place between the young disciple and her mother, in the presence of the teacher. Her mother, who was deeply affected at the prospect of soon losing her loved one, was standing by her bedside, when she, with great solemnity, said: "Now, mother, I'm going to heaven, and I would like you to promise me that you'll give your heart to Jesus." Then, stretching out her little wasted hand, she added: "If you are to do it, mother, give me your hand; but if you are not to do it, don't give me your hand." The mother, sobbing bitterly, held out her hand, and the little one, taking hold of it, counselled her mother not to stay away from church, and to try and induce her stepfather, who was a very careless man, to go along with her.

Several years have passed since then, and the writer was credibly informed a short time ago that both her mother and stepfather had been from that time most regular in their attendance on the ordinances of the sanctuary, and my informant was hopeful they were both on the way to join the loved one who is now to them not lost, but gone before.

A REMARKABLE CONVERSION.

THE following remarkable incident is related by Dr. T. D. Carruthers, the founder of an inebriate asylum at Hartford, Connecticut. Calvin B——, a wealthy New York merchant, was walking up Broadway, New York, sadly under the influence of opium, to which he was greatly addicted. He strolled into a bookstore in a half-sleeping condition, and said to the store-keeper, "Give me a book to drive away the blue devils." The man handed him a copy of Rev. E. Payson Hammond's "Conversion of Children,"* a book written more especially to assist Christian parents and workers in leading children to the Saviour. The merchant paid for the book without knowing what it was, put it in his pocket, and found his way to his beautiful home. There he threw himself on a lounge and was soon buried in slumber.

Awaking by and by, he said to his wife, "Where is that book I brought with me?" She handed him the book. As he looked at it, and being no longer under the influence of the drug, he exclaimed, smiling, "Why, that bookseller has played a joke upon me; the idea of his giving me that book to read!" On second thoughts he added, "How can that be? He could not have known me; I must be a perfect stranger to him." Still he took the book and read it. His wife was a Christian, and doubtless she lifted up her heart in prayer that God would give his blessing.

Calvin B—— soon became deeply interested in the little book. As he came to the middle of it, where he found one of Mr. Hammond's Gospel addresses to the young, he was led to see himself as a lost, guilty sinner, and to see Christ as the only Saviour. He fell down on his knees and cried for mercy. The prayer was heard and answered; the peace of God filled his soul. He at once abandoned the use of intoxicants and of opium, which had been ruining him soul and body.

Dr. Carruthers states that from that time he has lived a consistent Christian life. He keeps in his office in New York a supply of "The Conversion of Children." When any of his old companions in sin come into the office, he urges them to read it, saying it has been the means of his salvation, temporarily and spiritually, and praying that it may be blessed to them in like manner.

MODERN MARTYRS.

"This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses" (Gr. martyrs).—Acts ii. 32.

WE often hear the martyrs spoken of as a host whose number is already fulfilled, as an army whose soldiers fought their battles in the earlier ages of the Christian war, and won all the crowns prepared for those who should be "faithful unto death." In a special sense, doubtless, those who sealed their testimony with their blood were martyrs of Jesus; but by confining martyrdom within the bounds of physical suffering and death at the hands of men, do we not lose something of the zeal and power that enkindled the martyr-spirit?

The sufferings of the martyrs in the fiery furnace of persecution, were an outward and visible sign to the world of their heart-belief in the truth they proclaimed; their dying faith was living faith in the risen and ascended Son of God to whom they bore witness. By it they "endured as seeing Him who is invisible;" by it they showed the fervour of their love to Him "whom having not seen," they loved; by it they revealed the brightness of "the hope set before" them, for the joy of which they, like their Lord, "endured the Cross, despised the shame," and "resisted unto blood."

God's martyrs! they are those who, through faith, "subdue kingdoms, work righteousness, obtain promises, out of weakness are made strong," yea, all those who, in the temptations of "the world, the flesh, and the devil," are, and shall be, "more than conquerors through Him that loved" them.

There are spiritual encounters with Apollyon as terrible as any physical conflict with wild beasts; there are fires of suffering in the heart, as difficult to bear unflinchingly as the fearful, but quickly-consuming fires of the stake; and in all the tribulation, sorrows, distresses of life, we are called to be God's martyrs. The "fiery trial" is not a "strange thing," but a God-appointed martyrdom, wherein we may show forth the reality of our faith, and hope, and love, and glorify Him; the disappointments and crosses of every day are the testing of our calm confidence in "that good, acceptable, and perfect will of God."

Did we not despise our martyrdom because it is not accomplished before the eyes of the world, but in some obscure corner, we might even there win the martyr's crown; did we always suffer as God's witnesses in little things, there would arise, even now, a cloud of faithful martyrs to prove, by the infallible proof of a life of faith, that the religion of Jesus is not dying or dead, as some assert, but alive and living for evermore. The martyr-spirit is the God-inspired power that can enable men to suffer and do all things through Him, without whom they can do nothing. Oh, to know more of the exceeding greatness of his power to usward!

KNOWING AND DOING.*

BY REV. GEORGE BOWEN, BOMBAY.

"If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."—JOHN x. 3, 17.

WHO will show us any good thing? Where shall we find happiness? What is the secret of a happy life? These are questions that all men put to each other without being able to obtain a satisfactory and conclusive answer. Yet every one has already the information that he professes to desire. He puts into his vest pocket a scrap of paper given him by a person who is of no account in his eyes, and embarks for remote continents in a vain life-long search of what is plainly enough pointed out in that scrap of paper. Socrates and Plato, and Alcibiades discoursed together of the likelihood or unlikelihood of the advent of One from the skies to teach man what he so much needed to know—what, by himself, he never would know. Little, however, did it dawn upon upon their apprehensions that such a visitor would, unheeded, declare the secret so long and vainly sought by all mankind.

Happiness we learn from our Lord Jesus Christ (but do we learn? Are we not mocking Him in the use of this language, sitting at his feet as though to learn, yet giving our eyes and ears to some show discovered through the window?)—happiness consists, not in knowing, but in doing.

In doing! Who would have thought it? We should have thought to find happiness in exemption from work. We look with compassion upon the poor people who are obliged to work, and deplore the infelicity of our own position in being obliged occasionally to exert ourselves. Ah! I see how it is. Happiness consists in such work as that of carrying bags of pearls, caskets of diamonds, and the like to our own treasury.

No, this is not the work of which Jesus speaks. The acts which he commends are acts of self-denial for the good of others. "The good of others! You mistake me quite. I ask how I may be happy myself; my question does not relate to the happiness of my neighbour. As you can give me no information on the point which interests me, I decline your instructions."

Ah! if the poor man would only suffer Jesus to teach him! "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." You yourselves shall find your happiness in a life of self-humiliation and self-abnegation. Be content to be as your Master, and your Master will not be content without making you as He is. Wash the feet of the disciples, deny yourself for their advantage, and the Son of God will take good care that you have a peace which passeth all understanding, and a joy unspeakable. There is a woe where there is knowledge unaccompanied by obedience. It is fearful to think of the vast number who, at the present day, hear the sayings of Jesus, and keep them not.

Thou hast a very profound acquaintance with Scripture truth. A false doctrine is immediately betrayed to thee; no disguise can hide it. How well and piously canst thou discourse! People feel small in thy presence in view of thy religious knowledge. Thou couldst write a discourse on the love of God that would carry off a prize from men. If heaven could be won by knowledge, thou wouldst surely win it. But wouldst thou wash the feet of a disciple? Well, I think thou wouldst; for there is so much versatility in thee that it would be strange if thou wert not at some time found doing this. But are thine own hands clean? They art not. Even thy kindly offices are mischievous, because the truth does not sway thee. Thou knowest the truth, and servest falsehood. How canst thou be happy? The truth of God that is in thee can only make thee miserable, for thy life is not subordinated to it.

How many are deceiving themselves with regard to their true condition, simply because of their religious knowledge! They cannot understand how one should know so much without being a child of God. The truth of God is really, however, imprisoned in their mind. They receive the truth as though it were a king, and conduct it over a drawbridge and into handsome apartments, but soon it appears that the guest is a prisoner of State. When it pleases the host, the royal prisoner is brought forth and ceremoniously waited upon, but at other times it remains in seclusion. It has not the range of their being. Into the courtyard of their desires it is seldom allowed to descend, and a sentinel sometimes repels it from the terraced walk of their purposes. When they go abroad it is confined at home; and when they are about to examine the interior of their palace, instructions are given to remove the prisoner from the apartments to be visited.

"If ye know these things." We have known them long enough, wondering all the while that we found so little joy in the knowledge. David and others esteemed the Word of God more than thousands of gold and silver. Why have we no similar appreciation of the Scriptures? Why is our joy in them so dubious and imperfect? For this reason: that we sought to find pleasure in the mere contemplation of the Word, losing sight of the plain declaration of our Lord: "Happy are ye if ye do them." The knowledge that leads to action is blessed. "That ye be not barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ."

CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS.

DEAR SIR,—May I suggest to Christian parents and friends the very great need that exists of making a special effort at this season for the spiritual benefit of the many boys and girls who will be at home during their Christmas holidays? The world will be making its arrangements, and children's "parties," pantomimes, &c., will be provided in abundance. Cannot we who, by God's grace, know "something better," be equally in earnest in seeking to reach these dear young friends, many of whom are longing to find true and lasting happiness?

I attended a children's "party" last year, at which a magic lantern exhibition of "Pilgrim's Progress" was given, and occupied the entire evening, the truth shown by the pictures being earnestly enforced, and three suitable hymns shown on the screen being sung. The interest evinced was most marked, and I believe there was real spiritual blessing. Why should not such methods be widely resorted to this Christmas, and who shall say where the blessing would end?

I would suggest that any friends who are led to see the importance of this should communicate with the Hon. Sec. of the Children's Special Service Mission, 48, Paternoster-row, E.C.—Yours faithfully, E. T. M. DENNES.

MISS ALICE PEARSE, 5, Bedford-terrace, Plymouth, will be glad of gifts from any friends who may have a wish to help on the work of supplying sailors in this port with good reading matter.

THE CONSTANTINOPLE REST.

THE kind Christian friends in Great Britain whose generous offerings and hearty sympathy enabled me to establish and maintain the "Strangers' Rest" in Constantinople for nearly five years, will be interested to know that it is now linked with the "Smyrna Rest," in accordance with my original plan. My own health and strength are not sufficient for the constant strain of responsibility and labour in keeping up the work single-handed, with no assured income, and I am not allowed by friends or physicians to go on with it.

I have therefore transferred the entire work with the property belonging to it, in the shape of books, furniture, and fixtures of the coffee and reading-rooms to Miss Maud Grimston, of Smyrna, who has consented to assume the general superintendence of the "Constantinople Rest," and, with the associates, conduct this work at the Capital, as well as in Smyrna.

The success which has attended the spiritual work at the "Smyrna Rest," and the harmony which the workers sustain with other Christian colours in the field, are the best guarantee of success in taking up this enterprise; while their experience of foreign work will prove no small gain to those who attempt the more difficult warfare at the enemy's headquarters. The "Smyrna Rest" may yet prove recruiting ground for fresh workers, who shall there be trained for other departments of the army. For such extension I most earnestly pray, and that abundant blessing may attend those who now undertake the "Constantinople Rest." I would also solicit the continued interest, sympathy, and prayer, as well as offerings, of God's people, in behalf of this arduous work at the very heart of the Turkish Empire. If those who have hitherto supplied valuable journals and magazines, fresh from the press, will continue the same to the "Constantinople Rest," it will be gratefully appreciated. Funds contributed should be specially designated, as Miss Grimston will hereafter direct, in her own name.

In closing my connection with this enterprise, I would tender my heartfelt thanks to all those beloved friends in England and Scotland, as also on the Continent, who not only gave of their substance to inaugurate and support this work for all the hitherto unreached—both of Orientals and of British and other—seamen but also, in many cases, most tenderly ministered to my necessities in times of weakness and suffering, from the overstrain of many years of labour in the East.

The work to which I seemed called of God, henceforth, is a very quiet one, in family visitation, holding mothers' meetings, and sowing the precious "seed of the Kingdom" in and around Constantinople. For this I ask the prayers of God's children, that there may yet be a richer season of fruit-bearing to the Master's praise, before the call comes to "enter into rest."

Ever yours for Christ,

Constantinople. MARIA A. WEST.

THE HIGHLAND ORPHANAGE.—This young northern institution has had another prosperous year, thanks to the kindness of many friends of the orphan children. Of these there are 16 now cared for—eight girls and eight boys. The first child received—a girl—is now in a comfortable home in Canada. Dr. Macnee, the visiting doctor, reports very favourably on the health of the children, and adds an important testimony, showing that the institution of the Orphanage has already been the means of carrying comfort to parents who would otherwise have yielded to gloomy forebodings as to the care of their children after their decease. We sincerely hope that a growing and practical public interest in this Orphanage may allow of a corresponding extension in its beneficent operations. NO ROOM—YET ROOM.

BY REV. DR. MERRITT HULBURD, NEW YORK.

"There was no room at the inn."—LUKE ii. 7.
"And yet there is room."—LUKE xiv. 22.

BAZAARS for merchants, oriental hospitality for travellers, palaces for kings; but a manger for the Son of God! I have seen cities illuminated, multitudes rejoicing over the birth of a puny heir to a petty prince; but "Low lies his head with the beasts of the stall." And thus it has been to his Gospel: there has been "no room." Room for the world and its claims, for its follies and its maxims, but none for its King. His claims are met by the multitude with "I've no time; I'm too busy." They can stop for anything else, can grow serious over the latest follies or fashions, but are too much occupied to find room for Him whose they are and whom they ought to serve.

With most, everything else has taken precedence of Him whose claim is first and best. This planet is his. He made it. Why should not the owner when He comes have place? And our bodies are his temple, made for that purpose: they commit sacrilege who fill that temple with other things to his exclusion.

"Room for business, room for pleasure.
But for Christ the crucified,
Not a place that He can enter
In the heart for which he died."

In the first passage we see what reception the lost world accords its Saviour and Redeemer. We shall find in the second clause of the text the reception which He accords to the world. Sinful, alien, ungrateful world, for it there is room.

Room for the ingrate who had wasted his patrimony in riotous living and was returning in his rags and filth; room for the weakly wicked who denied Him, for Peter found a welcome; room for the cruel persecutor, for Saul of Tarsus saw Him "as one born out of due time;" room for the degraded outcast, for the woman that was a sinner who wept at his feet, heard Him say, "Thy sins, which were many, are all forgiven thee;" room for the world's outlaws, for the dying thief who humbly prayed, "Lord, remember me when Thou comest into Thy kingdom," heard dying lips frame themselves to the assurance "To-day thou shalt be with me in Paradise." Yes, there is room for all in that heart of Him who "so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him might not perish, but have everlasting life."

"Yet there is room! The Lamb's bright hall of song,
With its fair glory, beckons thee along;
Room, room, still room! Oh, enter, enter now."

O world, world! dost thou know what thou art doing, and who it is that is saying, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock"? He is the Prince of Peace: let Him in, and the wars and discords that have rent thee so long shall cease. Let Him in: He is meek and lowly, and there shall be rest for all thy turbulence and turmoil. Let Him in to the marriage-feast, and there shall be blessing on thy joy. Let Him into the homes of poverty and sadness, and He will bless the toil and the rest of the labouring man, and set a light in the darkened chambers of affliction. O sinful soul, let Him in, and thou shalt lose thy burden and find peace. Let Him now be born in thy heart, and enthrone Him in his rightful place, amid the rejoicings of this advent time. Let it not be as of old, that when He comes, the buyers and the sellers, the dancers and the players, shall have all thy heart, and no room be found for Him.

O how long are the selfishness and greed of this world to fling its hateful contrast upon that Divine love that watches and waits in the pure heroism of most unselfish devotion? How long the wide welcome of the Father's house to be met and mocked by manger cradle, and the barred heart and closed gate which has no room for its Prince and Saviour?

"Thou didst leave Thy throne, and Thy kingly crown,
When Thou camest to earth for me;
But in Bethlehem's homes there was found no room
For thy holy nativity.

"The foxes found rest, and the birds had their nest,
In the shade of the cedar tree;
But thy couch was the sod, O Thou Son of God,
In the deserts of Galilee.

"When Heaven's arches shall ring, and its choirs shall sing
At thy coming to victory;
Let thy voice call me home, saying Yet there is room—
There is room at my side for thee."

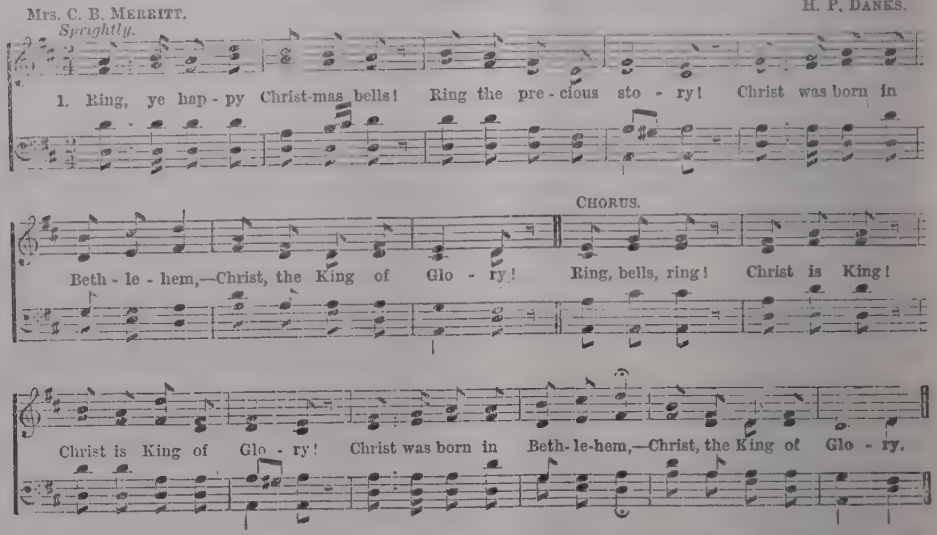
Ring, Ye Happy Christmas Bells!

"Lift up your heads, O ye gates! even lift them up, ye everlasting doors! and the King of Glory shall come in!" PSALM xxiv. 7.

Mrs. C. B. MERRITT. H. P. DANKS.

Sprightly.



1. Ring, ye hap - py Christ-mas bells! Ring the pre - cious sto - ry! Christ was born in CHORUS.
Beth - le - hem,—Christ, the King of Glo - ry! Ring, bells, ring! Christ is King!
Christ is King of Glo - ry! Christ was born in Beth-le-hem,—Christ, the King of Glo - ry.

2 Little children, come and learn,
Learn the sweet old story:
Once the Christ a child like you,
Now the King of Glory!

3 Then the angels sang aloud,
"Peace on earth!" and "glory"
To the God who from above
Sent this wondrous story.

4 O ye angels, sing again!
Sing the gladsome story!
An answer to the joyous bells—
"Christ is King of Glory!"

YOUNG WOMEN IN THE NORTH-WEST.

THE branch of the Y.W.C.A. and Institute, which has been carried on for ten years at Mornington-crescent, is now being removed to 19, Patshull-road, Kentish-town-road. This step has been considered necessary, and taken with much prayer and faith that it was God's leading towards a better and wider field of work among the young women of shops, houses of business, and others, especially since the successful labours of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in this largely populated district.

The reading and evening rooms will be open every night except Saturday, and will be occupied in a variety of ways, according as we shall find the best methods of laying hold and interesting the young women. We take this opportunity of thanking all who have helped us, and earnestly ask that they may continue their sympathy with us in our new premises.

CHRISTMAS.

LEAP up, O heart, and sing!
For yonder breaks the glorious morn
On which its mighty Lord was born;
Of Peace the Prince, of Love the King;
Leap up, O heart, and sing!

Leap up, O heart, and sing!
Fling open wide thy gates of praise,
Compose thy noblest, loftiest lays;
Let all thy powers take heavenward wing;
Leap up, O heart, and sing!

Leap up, O heart, and sing!
For life is sweet, and love is bliss;
And thou hadst neither, but for this
Eternal Source from which they spring;
Leap up, O heart, and sing!

Leap up, O heart, and sing!
For thou hast wept by many graves;
But lo, the Saviour comes and saves!
And shall the loved ones round Him bring:
Leap up, O heart, and sing!

Leap up, O heart, and sing
To shattered hopes, and helpless grief,
And prisoned souls without relief!
Freedom and joy this Christ shall bring:
Leap up, O heart, and sing.

Leap up, O heart, and sing!
For thou hast seen thy God revealed
In human form—but half concealed;
Whose birthday bells this day shall ring:
Leap up, O heart, and sing.

Leap up, O heart, and sing!
Awake the minstrels of the spheres!
With music fill all mortal ears,
Till heaven and earth high praises fling
Around the birthday of their King.

RAILWAY MEN'S BIBLE UNION.—About 1600 have joined this Union. The Hon. Secretary (Mrs. Probyn, Oakfield, Three Bridges) would be glad if any who are wishing to do so would apply to her for a card and the New Year's Letter. A stamp should be enclosed. She has received cheering letters from some of the members, telling her that the Union has been a help and blessing to them.

For the Young.

"GOD KNOWS ALL ABOUT IT."

A TRUE CHRISTMAS STORY.

IT was a frosty evening in December, a few days before Christmas, when two lads might have been seen wandering through the busy streets of a great city. Their day's work was done, and though the night was setting in cold and cheerless, there was no fire in their home grate to warm them. So they preferred to walk the streets till bed-time rather than sit still and shiver in their room. There was certainly some attraction in those bustling streets, with the brilliantly-lighted shops gaily decorated with Christmas presents of every imaginable shape and price.

Amongst the crowd of children who, with envious eyes, had been gazing into these tempting windows, might have been seen our two boys; the younger, named Joe, was about ten years old; the elder, Bill, about sixteen. Very hungry they looked, and shabby too, as the gaslight showed, to the worst advantage, the rags that clothed them. Joey was all eyes and ears as he stared into these shops, and listened to the praises of their contents. Bill was all ears certainly, but no "eyes," for an accident had deprived him of both some years before. They gained a poor living by going round to ash-boxes, dust-bins, &c., and collecting and sorting every scrap that was saleable, the elder carrying a bag and the younger a hook.

The two boys had stood in silence for a few minutes, each absorbed with his own thoughts, when the younger said, with a sigh, "Why can't we have something nice at Christmas, like other people?" "Where's the money to come from, Joe?" Then each relapsed into silence again.

Next morning they were early making their usual rounds. Joe had just raked out some paper from a dust-bin near the garden gate of a comfortable-looking suburban villa, when he suddenly exclaimed: "Oh, Bill, here's a funny piece of paper! Isn't it strong, and doesn't it crackle? And there's figures on it!" "Let me feel it, Joey," said the blind boy. Taking it in his fingers, he was not long in deciding that it was none other than a bank note. Before father and mother had been called away, and his sight had left him, the elder lad had known what a Bank of England note was like. "Read it, Joey," said Bill; and Joey, after a lot of trouble, made out the words "Five Pounds." "What's it worth, Bill?" "It's worth five gold sovereigns, Joey." "Oh, Bill, what a find! Now we will have something nice! What shall we buy? Oh, what shall we buy?" The elder lad could scarcely speak for emotion, but, making an effort, slowly said: "This isn't ours. It must have got in that bin by mistake. We must take it up to the house, Joey." Poor Joe! he could not give up such a prize. He was too young when his mother died to remember her parting words to her two boys, as, on her death-bed, she had committed them to the care of Him who had promised to be a "Father to the fatherless." But the elder lad had never forgotten her words, and though there was now blindness outwardly there was inward sight.

"Bill, it's our's as much as anybody else's. You don't know who dropped it."

"Joey, lead me up to the door."

With a slow and rebellious step he obeyed. They knocked at the door. The servant came, and, seeing their ragged clothes and hungry look, closed the door without waiting for their inquiry, saying, sharply, "Nothing to give."

Joey looked at the shut door, and then at the note, and said, "Now it is ours, come away."

"Joey, I'll knock again," and before the younger could check him, he had brought the knocker down heavily once more. Soon the door was opened again, and this time the master of the house appeared.

"Why don't you go away? You've been told we've nothing to give. If you knew what I've just lost, you wouldn't come here with your begging."

"What have you lost, sir," said the blind lad; "perhaps we've found it." And he produced the note without further question. The gentleman was staggered, but hastily thanking the lads, he hurried off to show the recovered note, and when he returned, the lads, not liking to wait, had gone. Poor Bill had to listen to many reproaches as they went home, but his answer was simply, "Joey, we've done right; God knows all about it, and perhaps He will yet send us something for Christmas."

Christmas Eve found the two lads at their daily business, sorting their collections from ash-box and dust-bin, and as they lay down in their one room that night there was but little in hand to tide over the coming day. Joey had tried hard to believe that his brother's words might be realised, but now fairly gave up hope, and began to compare their lot with that of others. Next morning came a tap at their room door, and a message was brought that a man with a hamper was waiting for them at the door. Down went the boys to discover their unusual visitor.

"Here! are you the boys that found a bank note a few days ago? Well, this is for you then, and a nice job I've had to find you!"

"What is it? Who's it from?"

"Never mind!" and the man was gone.

The hamper was soon carried upstairs, and you should have seen the amazement and delight of those two lads, as the younger, with excited exclamations, drew from underneath the straw, a piece of bacon, and a large fowl, and a plum pudding, all ready cooked, and some big apples to fill up the corners! Bill could scarcely speak a word for some time, but when he found his tongue he quietly said: "Joey, God knows all about it, and He has sent us something nice for Christmas."

MRS. MUMFORD AND THE ORPHANS.

A few days since I received a massive envelope containing nearly a score of letters from Mrs. Mumford's pupils, congratulating me upon my seventieth birthday. Their letters were of great interest to me as they mirrored forth, although in somewhat broken English, the blessings which they have received in being educated in Philippopolis under Christian influences. I will give a few extracts:—

One writes: "How thankful we should be to God, who provided for us to be in a Christian school, in which we receive a Christian education. I am from Parzardgike. My mother prayed very much. God answered her prayers. When I was about four years old she died. My father and brother are not Christians. I like to sing this song very much: 'In some way or other the Lord will provide.'"

Another pupil writes: "I am from the village of Merichling. My parents are very poor." In one of the letters a pupil expresses a desire to become a missionary to China.

Another pupil writes: "I have been three years in Mrs. Mumford's school, and I thank God for his providence in permitting me to be educated in such a school, and to know more of Him."

I will only give one more extract, although they are all of great interest: "I love to write you a short letter and tell you a little about my circumstances. I was a poor little girl. My father died when I was only two years old, and my mother died when I was two and a-half years old."

Mrs. Mumford continues to educate and care for orphans, and poor but promising non-paying pupils, which draws heavily upon her resources. I stated some months since that she had been obliged to make a new purchase adjoining her place, which cost her £350, a part of which remains unpaid. We make this statement believing that those Christians who have contributed so willingly to this Mission will take pleasure in lifting a burden off the shoulders of this consecrated, self-sacrificing servant of God. She would thus be enabled to extend a practical Christian education to a still greater number of pupils.

A WARNING TO YOUNG MEN.

AT seventeen I ran away from home—hardened in heart and steeped in sin. I came to London. By what I called accident then, I obtained a situation. My nature was not strong—I became an easy prey to bad company. For four years I led a life of thriftlessness and dissipation. My mind, too, became saturated with infidel notions. I took a pleasure in studying to undermine the faith of Christians, by ridiculing their religion and arguing against their Saviour. I always wanted to point out the "rationalism" of a social system, where men, instead of following a phantom, should settle themselves to assiduously working out the greatest good of the greatest number. I was convinced, on secular grounds, that moderation in all things was a most wise and happy principle.

I have said that I started life in London with a weak nature—it was so weak that, although my judgment condemned my conduct, temptations overcame me, and my own rules for right guidance at length got cast aside. While deepening in dissipation, judgment seemed to leave me altogether. At length I lost my situation; got another and lost that too; got another, and through drink that, like the others, slipped away from me.

Now was I utterly cast down. Up and down the north of England I went, shifting about, trying to find a place to settle down in—ever longing for the comfort and cheerfulness of a home, but no such pleasure came to me (my own home was broken up by the hand of death). At last I found myself back in London, hungry, destitute, and in despair. I was ashamed to beg money of my friends, yet forced through sheer hunger to cast myself on the hospitality of one, who gave me a shelter. All my plans in life had been upset; nothing had gone as I anticipated. This thought ever darkened my mind.

Disappointed in all my efforts to obtain a situation, it seemed as if life were so utterly full of crosses and cares that it was not worth carrying on any longer. What was the good of living when everything had gone, situations, friends, money, and respectability? Utterly broken down in spirit, I could not form any more resolutions. What would be the use? Had I not broken every one that ever I had made? No! rather than prolong existence like this I determined there and then to cast myself into the water near to which I was walking.

Suddenly, as I was about to take this awful step, the thought entered my mind to try this "Unknown God." I did, and cried to God to have mercy on me and help me. A few hours after I was led to visit a house of business. I entered, and saw the proprietor; he was just in want of such an assistant as I explained to him I had been. The interview led to my engagement. Need I add more? God had answered my first prayer. Soon He led me to Jesus, with whom I have now peace and joy.

May God take this warning to all young men who are situated as I was in my days of dissipation and scepticism. If any are depending on good resolutions, may they seek the strength of God, not their own, to fulfil them. If any young man of a sceptical turn of mind should read this, may he solemnly inquire in his own mind why it is that he never feels as if he had done a really good or manly thing after arguing with someone against the existence of God. May the Holy Spirit use that sensation to condemn him in his conscience and bring him to the peace of Jesus.

WOLVERHAMPTON.—Miss Brryman has concluded a three months' Mission at Cleveland-street Chapel. The first month's services having been attended with signal blessing, the Mission was continued for a second and eventually a third month, during which services were held every night. Numbers have been brought to the feet of Jesus, and amongst them have been some most remarkable conversions. Miss Brryman's address is 29, Westbourne Park-terrace, London, W.

DEAR SIR,—About twelve months ago you kindly inserted a letter from Mr. Josiah Spiers, making a special appeal for £2000 for the Foreign work of the Children's Special Service Mission. We are anxious now to let our friends know the progress that has been made with the Fund, and the work that has been done.

So far about £1400 has been received. Encouraged by this, we have gone forward vigorously with the work of translating and printing the Children's Picture Leaflets in various languages. We have issued the following during the present year: French, 160,000; German, 240,000; Dutch, 40,000; Flemish, 40,000; Swedish, 40,000; Danish, 40,000; Finnish, 40,000; Bohemian, 40,000; Arabic, 60,000; Welsh, 40,000.

In a few days we hope to make up the total to 900,000 by an edition of 160,000 of a new series in Swedish; the greater part of these are to be distributed to the Sunday-schools of the Örebro and Stockholm Sunday-school Union (their districts including nearly the whole of Sweden,) early in the New Year. The Queen of Sweden, who sent Mr. Spiers £10 for the Fund, was pleased to accept 10,000 of the former series to give to the day-school children of Stockholm.

A lady at Helsingfors writes about the distribution of the Finnis series in the villages: "The grown-up people as well as the children very eagerly received them; I am sure there were many of them to whom the little tracts received were the only printed papers they possessed, except the Catechism."

During the last two or three months we have also sent out to various friends in the Mission field in India, &c., paper ready printed with the pictures, leaving the letterpress to be added at its destination, for editions of our leaflets in the following languages: Gujerati, 40,000; Marathi, 40,000; Oriya, 40,000; Telugu, 60,000; Punjabi, 8000; Hindustani, 32,000; Bulgarian, 40,000; Japanese, 40,000; Malagasy, 40,000. A few copies of the first tract in Japanese have just reached us. They have been printed at Tokio, and will no doubt be largely circulated through our Scripture Union members, of whom there are over 1000 in all parts of Japan. We continue the distribution of our Arabic series—a new leaflet each month—to all the Christian schools of Syria and Palestine. Dr. Kalopothakes, of Athens, is preparing for us a series in modern Greek, which is being printed in London. M. Mijatovich, the Serbian Ambassador in London, has very kindly translated a series in Serbian, and they are being put in type at Belgrade.

We have also editions in French, Danish, Dutch, Bohemian, and Hindustani in the press, and translations are in progress in Norwegian, Hindi, German, Magyar, and Finnish. We hope to continue the series already commenced in Spanish, Italian, Portuguese, Polish, Slavonian, &c. In January we hope to recommence the distribution of the Feuillets Illustrés pour la Jeunesse, at Mr. McAll's eighty Mission stations throughout France, by giving a leaflet each week to every child attending the children's services. This will require 9000 weekly. We have just sent a letter to 2000 Protestant pastors in France, Switzerland, and Italy, offering cards of the Scripture Union, and grants of our French and Italian leaflets.

These attractive Gospel leaflets are useful in so many parts of the world besides the special country they are printed for. We have sent the French series to Canada, the Portuguese to Brazil, the Spanish to Mexico and Central America, the Dutch to the Cape of Good Hope, the German to New York, St. Petersburg, and Budapesth, the Swedish to Finland, the Hindi to the Coolies in Demerara, and now a large supply of the Bohemian is asked for, for the 30,000 or 40,000 Bohemians living in Chicago. The Swedish, Danish, Dutch, and German series have also been largely used at the Sailors' Rests in different places.

It would be easy to fill columns with the testimonies which have come to us as to the way in which these tracts are appreciated by the children, and by the parents also, and as to the valuable aid they are giving to Mission workers in so many parts of the world. During a month's tour in German Switzerland last summer, with Rev. W. S. Standen, although we travelled very rapidly, we were able to scatter about 3000 of the Frohe Botschaft für Kinder, and they were everywhere received with eagerness and delight.

Since the special fund for the foreign work was commenced in 1875 we have received about £3000, and so far about three millions of the picture leaflets have been printed, besides editions of "Walking in the Light," and "The Value of a Child's Soul," in French, German, Dutch, Swedish, Bohemian, &c. The tracts at present in progress will make about 1,300,000 more. When these are completed, and also also an edition in Tamil, which we expect to hear is in preparation, there will be a series of the leaflets in thirty languages besides English.

As we have more than seventy varieties of the "Picture Leaflets" and the "Loving Messages" for the children of England, and as, when all above mentioned is accomplished, there will still be only eight varieties in most of the languages named, we feel that there is much more work to be done. We hope also to extend the work to several other languages in course of time. Russian, Chinese, Armenian, Persian, Cingalese, Malay, Kaffir, are amongst those we have thought of.

We earnestly desire now to complete the sum of £2000, and if it is received we shall certainly endeavour to find translators in these additional languages. There is a vast field for Christian effort in thus sending forth the Gospel message to the children of many lands. Not three millions, but thirty millions of such children's tracts are needed. All the work above shown has been done without any charge whatever upon the Foreign Fund for travelling expenses, or for salaries or rent, the office staff of the Children's Special Service Mission having been made use of without extra expense. Through the kindness of many friends abroad, who have translated for us gratuitously, not more than about £30 has been paid for translations.

Yours faithfully,
T. B. BISHOP.

A SOCIAL EVENING.

HAD any of our readers stepped into Mr. C. Chamberlain's Mantle Warehouse, 13, 14, and 15, Staining-lane, E.C., on a recent Tuesday evening, a very pleasing scene would have met their view. The young women and others employed in the warehouse (about ninety in number) were entertained at a social tea, kindly provided by Mr. and Mrs. Chamberlain. After a substantial meal had been partaken of, Rev. J. E. Jasper, of Wallington, was asked to preside. Mr. Chamberlain offered a few hearty words of welcome to the guests, and amid much cheering, Mrs. Chamberlain, who was requested to say a few words, responded in a very graceful speech.

The remainder of the evening was devoted to singing, readings, and recitations, in which the guests themselves took part. The claims of Christ were well set forth in brief addresses by Mrs. Fisher, Mr. Turner, and the chairman. Refreshments were handed round during the evening, and the meeting closed with a vote of thanks to the kind host and hostess for liberally entertaining them. As we gazed upon the pleasing scene, and saw the employers and their friends waiting upon the employés and endeavouring to make them happy and comfortable, we could not help wishing that such gatherings were more frequently to be met with, as they tend to promote a good feeling among all parties concerned, and to destroy those antipathies which so often exist. Besides, they afford a splendid opportunity of setting forth the claims of the Gospel to those who are thus gathered.

FATALISM AND AGNOSTICISM.

DR. MONRO GIBSON'S LECTURES.

A VERY hearty cheer greeted the Doctor as he appeared at Aldersgate-street, on Monday evening, December 15, after a month's interregnum. He was prevented by indisposition from being in his place the previous Monday, and this probably enhanced the pleasure with which he was on this occasion welcomed by his auditors. After a little recapitulation of the earlier lectures, he noticed what he called one of the occasional "streaks of light" that come into the course of the reflections of the writer of Ecclesiastes. A very striking example of this is found in chap. iii. 11: "He hath made everything beautiful in his time." Even here the writer only emerges for a brief space from the "dark tunnel" of his thought. In referring to the preceding verses of the chapter, which speak of a time for this, and a time for that, and a time for the other thing, Dr. Gibson said the true application of the passage was not that of personal direction in the individual life; it was simply the statement of inexorable facts. A beautiful quotation from Dr. Hamilton was given, which concluded thus: "The great clock of human destiny moves on till a mighty hand shall grasp its heart and hush for ever its pulse of iron."

Passing on from thoughts about "the resistless tyranny of the times," the writer of Ecclesiates flashes out with this wonderful utterance: "He hath made everything beautiful in his time." All is the doing of God, after all—not the action of blind chance or of fate. Do you say that such minute details are beneath the notice of God? Away with the thought! A chain without links is no chain at all, and a general providence is no providence at all. There is nothing accidental in the universe. More than that, God not only has a time for everything—the smallest thing—but he makes everything beautiful in its time. Even that which is not beautiful in itself, is so in its relation to other things. We must not judge of the whole scheme of God's providential government by the little bit of it that we see. Looked at in itself, this present life does not seem to us the beau ideal of what life ought to be; but viewed as God has appointed it—a training ground for eternity—its beauty and fitness are made manifest. So with respect to the dark times in the experience of believers, the same principle applies; they are for the trial of faith—beautiful in their time, and all "bound with golden chains about the feet of God."

"Every cloud that veileth love Itself is love."

Proceeding in his survey of the book, Dr. Gibson quoted from the same chapter, what he characterised as one of the darkest, blackest passages in the whole book, and which sharply illustrates the "Agnosticism" of the present day. "That which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; for all is vanity. All go into one place: so that a man hath no pre-eminence over a beast: all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again. Who knoweth the spirit of a man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth? Wherefore, I perceive that there is nothing better than that man should rejoice in his works; for that is his portion: for who shall bring him to see what shall be after him?"

This passage has caused special trouble to those foolish, unthinking people who look on the Bible as a collection of texts, each of which is alike, and in the same sense, a message from God. We must look at the surroundings, and the motive of the passage, and the reason for its finding a place in the sacred record. Old as this passage is, it might have been written yesterday as an exact expression of the latest scepticism of the present day. Many professed infidels have retained a belief in a future life, but in this day our great savants seem to have arrived at the same conclusion as the sceptic preacher who lived millenniums ago, though by a somewhat different process. They seek to teach us that man is only a "differentiated" beast, reaching this goal by the same agnostic pathway. "Who knoweth?" said the writer of Ecclesiastes; so say the "Agnostics" of to-day. We are accustomed to think that "Agnosticism" is the latest discovery of science—the inventor of the term is still alive: it is at any rate as old as Ecclesiastes. What a wonderful book is the Bible! It has an answer for every form of objection to the faith that comes up in every age. These recurring speculations are born, and die and disappear, but the teaching of the Bible lives on and on. As an example of the ephemeral character of sceptical works, Dr. Gibson referred to a popular book in Voltaire's time which had a circulation of 60,000 in the short space of two years—something marvellous for those days. Yet a generation had not elapsed before a copy could scarcely be found. So it will be with the sceptical productions of this more quickly moving age. But the old Book moves on, and its eternal truths, revealing as they do the dignity and destiny of man, are a perennial spring of blessing and comfort to succeeding generations of men.

The lecturer, in closing his deeply instructive study from the "Old Book," expatiated very eloquently on the glorious hopes and certainties of the eternal future to those to whom Christ is the ideal Man, and who take Him as the Saviour of their life.

A SCHOOL of the PROPHETS in MASSACHUSETTS.

THE land of the Puritans, especially in New England, has been, from its earliest history, peculiarly conservative. In its strongest churches not a word dared be spoken in prayer-meeting by an ordinary layman. Woe be to him who, from an overflowing heart, warmed by a true Christian enthusiasm, should dare to rise and speak from the impulse of his heart; pastor and deacons alike would speedily frown him down. Till within comparatively a few years exhortation and prayer publicly were delegated to the pastor or a few officials. The Civil War developed "the Christian Commission," where lay delegates were forced to carry on public service in camp and hospital. The advent of Mr. Moody and kindred workers has done more than anything else to break down the old barriers, and men o all professions now find a field of evangelistic work everywhere.

To meet this new state of affairs, and to equip young and old for service, who are unable to take a College course, an Institution has been planned which, if wisely carried out, will result in preparing men for mission work all along the lines of Christian service. It is proposed to begin operations in Springfield early in January, under the guidance of competent instructors. Rev. Theron H. Hawkes, D.D., formerly a successful Ohio pastor, has been secured to take the general charge. Leading men in the State have been named as instructors, among them Dr. Pentecost, Mr. Sayford, Mr. Russell Sturgis, and other prominent lay workers. It is expected that Mr. Moody will address the students occasionally.

The course is mapped out for two years, which includes Bible history, and the study of fundamental truths, and the discussion of best methods of practical work. It is expected that this will give a more intelligent direction to Mission work in cities, and in churches poorly equipped, and will lead to large results. May this grand plan become a permanent and fixed fact. S. E. B.

GOTHENBURG, SWEDEN.—At the first Church meeting held in the Baptist "Tabernaklet," it was resolved to convey the united thanks and acknowledgment of the Church, to the friends in America and England who had contributed towards its erection. Sixteen hundred people were present at the dedication service. Cordial expressions of sympathy and Christian love were evinced by brethren belonging to other denominations.

VILLAGE COLPORTAGE.

COLPORTAGE is peculiarly suited for evangelistic work amongst the villagers, being continuous, steady, and regular. There is the Christian colporteur visiting the houses of the rich and poor systematically, seeking opportunities of speaking personally to the people concerning salvation, and leaving behind him in the cottages the "Word of Life," and many godly books, not as a loan or a gift, but a purchase.

Not only in the cottages, but in the fields and gardens and by the roadside, there are continual opportunities for carrying on this blessed work. A colporteur, on his way to visit a mill some miles from his home, passed through a field, where about forty were employed. He says: "Here I made my first call. Some said, 'He's a quack doctor;' others, 'He's a likeness taker;' and one or two said, 'No, he's a photographer!' With that I put down my pack, and said, 'I'll show you for nothing.' Then I took out a twopenny Testament, and said, 'This tells us of a Saviour's love, and the way from earth to heaven. The price is only twopence.' No one would buy, so I said, 'If you can't buy I'll give you something,' giving them some tracts, and talking with them. After all I sold to several of them 'Peep Behind the Scenes' and 'Christie's Old Organ,' to the amount of 2s. 3d.

"When I came to the mill I found about a hundred women in the rag-cutter's room. I spoke to all I could personally, pointing them to Jesus. Since that I have sold in this mill two hundred Bibles and Testaments, besides a large number of penny books and text cards."

Many of the Lord's stewards might confer a great blessing upon these English villages by sending a colporteur to them. Not a few already do so through the Christian Colportage Society, and the men meet with a warm welcome from people who were hungering for the Bread of Life.

Recently, the following very gratifying letter was received from a gentleman residing in a district to which one of these colporteurs had been sent:—

"It will give me great pleasure to act as Superintendent to your colporteur, and to assist him in any way in my power. I look upon his coming here as a direct answer to prayer. When I came to reside here, nearly three years ago, we found the parish a spiritual desert; and, indeed, a byword among the neighbouring parishes. Here and there individual Christians were doing a little in visiting the poor; but there was no organisation, and without it the work seemed hopeless. Things are now looking brighter; we have had two missions in the parish, one lay and the other in the church, and a few souls have received definite blessing, while others have been awakened; a great need has been felt in not having anyone to follow up the work by frequent house to house visitation, and it now seems as if your colporteur had been sent from outside to do the work. From what little I have seen of him I have been struck with his simplicity, humility, and earnestness, and I earnestly pray he may be a blessing to the neighbourhood."—Stray Leaves.

BOOKS FOR MEN IN LIGHTSHIPS.—A correspondent in Liverpool states that for many years past the seamen on board the four lightships of the Mersey have been regularly supplied with libraries by the Seamen's Friend Society, each library containing from 25 to 30 volumes; these are changed as often as the lightship men desire. An opportunity of sending the library ashore occurs once in every fortnight, when the Dock Board steamer goes out with provisions and relieves seamen for the lightships. The Seamen's Friend Society aims at being able to supply with a library every vessel leaving the port of Liverpool, including lightships, pilot-boats, steam-tugs, as well as ocean-going vessels. At the present moment the Society has nearly 1300 libraries and 39,000 volumes, besides Bibles, Testaments, hymn books, tracts and magazines, on board of vessels in every sea, if not in every port visited by British vessels.

Notes and Comments.

In order to secure the delivery of this number to our country readers before Christmas Day, we are obliged to prepare for press earlier than usual. A report of Rev. E. Payson Hammond's opening services in Liverpool on Sunday last is necessarily deferred. All communications received after Friday will be acknowledged in our next, the main portion of which will appear in new type.

Many workers among the London masses desire, as in former years, to give their poor neighbours a substantial meal on Christmas Day, at the same time breaking to them the bread of life. We have not space for the insertion of the appeals which reach us, but we hope, through the thoughtful generosity of our readers, to assist the workers very materially in this praiseworthy effect. More than a hundred Missions need such help.

A remarkable fact in the social history of our times is the formation of an association of a thousand navvies, who are engaged to drain the Campagna at Rome on strictly co-operative principles. Other works, such as railways, embankments, &c., have been already carried out under its management, a committee composed of freely-elected members of the association directing the operations. They have with them their own tradesmen, doctors, and cooks, and all necessary materials and tools. The money received for work is first employed in providing those things requisite for maintenance, then a portion is set aside for sickness and old age, the remainder being equally divided among the workers. By this means the middle-man is entirely dispensed with, and better wages obtained, even in competition with other contractors for the work done.

The success of such a scheme as this suggests its adaptation to other than Italian operatives, and furnishes important data to guide the counsels and investigations of those interested in social questions. Such combinations, where possible to be made, are far less cumbrous and costly than the "Unions," and elaborate organisations, to which the world is more accustomed. It is of first importance to the temporal interests of working men that they should co-operate on principles just to themselves and also to those whom they serve. While fairness and economy are prominent elements in the working man's programme, he will not lack the sympathy and co-operation of other classes in his endeavours to ameliorate his condition.

The soil of the Roman Campagna is being dug up by hundreds of Italian workmen, for the purpose of being turned to account in the cultivation of coffee. Experiments which have been made prove that this vast tract of land, for ages regarded as sterile and unproductive, will yield large profits to producers of this important article of diet. Who can say what a change this may portend to the city which, once the mistress of the earth, has long dwindled into comparative insignificance. This is not the only sign of the resuscitation of ancient centres of social and political life. Many events combine to indicate a return on the part of Divine Providence to former lines of working; what to men may have seemed as broken threads in the web of life are being taken up, and re-woven into the fabric of history!

A correspondent makes a timely and appropriate suggestion, which we trust will be complied with. The merciful preservation of life, and to a great extent of property, in London, in connection with the various attempts to blow up public buildings, ought, he says, to form a subject for special thanksgiving during the coming Week of Prayer, January 4—10. In our next issue we hope to give the detailed programme of the prayer-meetings in different parts of London.

A remarkable address was recently given at the large meeting of ministers held in Boston, by Dr. Merriman, of Somerville, on "Ways of the Spirit Concerning Church Revivals." He dealt most pungently with the question, what sort of preaching is demanded in order to secure Divine power and blessing? The answer given was: "Strong preaching, doctrinal preaching, not in the theoretical sense, but in the New Testament sense." What, however, asked the speaker, is the sort of preaching most sought after just now? Bright, simply practical, spicy, and highly illustrative; the result being that many high-minded, upright and respected members of our churches are confessing that, notwithstanding all these principles which they maintain, yet their secret life is strangely joyless and powerless. The fact is, nothing but the sincere milk of the Word will nourish and sustain regenerate life. Apart from this, whatever else is supplied, the soul languishes and the spirit faints

As to the ways of the Spirit in the revival of the Church, Dr. Merriman's remarks will repay closest attention:—

"What are they? (1) They are mysterious, like the wind that bloweth where it listeth. Beware of idolising even our expectations. (2) He comes without outward demonstration. He needs none of our heralding. He bids us lay aside our trumpets. He makes nought of our demonstrations. (3) It is the way of the Spirit to lead and not to be led. Even in the matter of writing our sermons He is our leader; we are not to give Him a subordinate position. So, in prayer, He leads, not is led. In conversion and throughout the Christian life He is to be the recognised leader. From the first conjunction of soul with spirit the Spirit leads. (4) Accordingly, it is not the way of the Spirit to repeat his manner of former comings. (5) It is his way to convince. And here is the point of antagonism and resistance from the human soul. We are inclined to parry the convictions He gives us. (6) To those who hold the Word He comes to freshen that Word and revivify it. Dead forms fall off. The Word becomes spirit and life. (7) The way of the Holy Spirit is to come to intercessors in behalf of others.

The question of Industrial Depression continues to force itself to the front, not only as to the pressing need for relief to distressed workmen and their families in various districts, but also in reference to the real cause, and true remedy, for the existing state of things. There is a growing feeling that the monopoly of capital, and the unfair use of land, by means of which it is kept out of the hands of small occupiers, and made to subserve the interests merely of one class, is a mistake, from a political standpoint, as well as a sin against Divine purpose and precept. The idea that self-interest ought to be the ruling law in business spheres is one that no quickened and enlightened conscience can accept. The gulf which exists between the rich and the poor, the master and the servant, is widening, and must be bridged over, if tremendous issues of trouble and sorrow are to be averted. Christian economy versus political economy is a cause which must be impartially tried and examined in order to the bridging that gulf, or at least to the exoneration of Christian society from blame in reference to its existence.

"What are we doing for the Sailor?" is the title of a little but pregnant brochure issued by the Shipwrecked Fishermen and Mariners' Society, Hibernia Chambers, London-bridge. The winter storms that are now upon us sharply emphasise the question, and we trust all who have the welfare of the sailor at heart will send for a copy of this pamphlet.

Testimonies abound to the rapidly increasing power of the Gospel over our Indian fellow-subjects. Sir Richard Temple, at a meeting of the Church Missionary Society in Kensington, recently, said that the educated native of India was quite ready to adopt Christianity, if only it was preached with sufficient dialectical power, and with zeal, fervour, and confidence. The moral effect of the Mission movement he declared to be of the most manifestly beneficial kind. One of the most blessed and important branches of the work is that connected with the women of India. By the means of female education and Zenana Missions, a change, full of promise and hope, is coming over the position and prospects of the female population. In every possible way, should Christian liberality and zeal further the work of God just now on Indian soil.

The Contemporary Review for the current month contains an article from the pen of Mr. Richard Heath, in which the character and influence of the famous Francis of Assisi is traced and delineated with great clearness and point. The spirit of all-embracing love which burned within him led to self-sacrifice and labour on behalf of the poor and suffering, which justifies his being regarded as the apostle of evangelic philanthropy and human brotherhood. His voluntary poverty is held up by Mr. Heath as a striking witness against making the pursuit of wealth and a respectable position the end of life, and as worthy of imitation in its principle because it affords abundant opportunities for the cultivation of fraternity, humility, and faith in the power of prayer. He struggled against the empire Satan has founded on the love men have for honours, pleasures, and wealth, by the endurance of poverty and shame; in a word, by the Cross. Without for a moment endorsing the idea of monastic orders of mendicant friars, and so forth, Mr. Heath's statement that the adoption by Christians generally of principles of self-denial and generous regard to the wants of others, on a far wider scale than at present prevails, would be highly salutary in its moral and social influence.

We may quote in illustration of this Mr. Heath's closing paragraph:—"If the witness of Francis in favour of a poverty exaggerated and ascetic was so fruitful of good, how infinitely more beneficial would be one in favour of a poverty modelled on the example of Jesus Christ. Our age, in many respects, repeats both those in which the Master and the disciple lived. Our civilisation is as that of Rome and the Middle Ages in a state of decay and approaching dissolution. Material prosperity blinds men now as it did then. But many of us feel that it is not drink, nor licentiousness, nor overcrowding, that is the fundamental evil, but the spirit of selfishness which drives us to make merchandise of each other, to kidnap and enslave whomsoever we can, in order that we may use their blood, their muscles, their brains, and their souls for our own advantage. In such a condition of things there is no liberty except in poverty, and he who, in the spirit of Francis, will commence a new society on the model of the Master, will find a whole world ready to follow him."

The same "Review" contains a brilliant and striking chapter, entitled, "A Faithless World," written by Miss Frances Power Cobbe, in which the state of the world without any traces of the religion of Christ remaining in it is vividly sketched. Such a state of things is, indeed, to be realised, for under the reign of him who is termed the Man of Sin, the faithlessness and apostasy which Miss Cobbe depicts will surely be manifested. Meanwhile, it is well for those who are in danger of the religious indifference which leads on to abandonment of faith, to consider to what they are drifting. The laissez croire which prevails so extensively in these days is one of the most perilous signs of our times. Many of those who yield to its influence have never seriously inquired whither it leads, and what must be the result of its universal acceptance. Christianity, as represented by multitudes of its professors, and as it is marred by divisions, errors, and human failure, has doubtless much to excite the rancorous criticism of its foes, but, nevertheless, it is, as Miss Cobbe declares it to be, ubiquitous in its beneficial relations to the world, and "the greatest thing with which we have to do from the cradle to the grave."

The essay before us has been called forth by the utterances of Mr. Justice Stephen, as a representative of a large and growing class of able and cultured men. Sad in the extreme is it to find one occupying such a position, and able to boast of such a lineage as the learned Justice, writing such words as these :—

"If human life is in the course of being fully described by science, I do not see what materials there are for any religion, or, indeed, what would be the use of one, or why it is wanted. We can get on very well without one, for though the view of life which science is opening to us gives us nothing to worship, it gives us an infinite number of things to enjoy. Love, friendship, ambition, science, literature, art, politics, commerce, professions, trades, and a thousand other matters, will go equally well, as far as I can see, whether there is, or is not, a God, or a future state."

Sir James Stephen, in thus expressing himself, only speaks as a prophet of that school which boasts of evolution and cold materialism as its chief doctrines and highest revelations: "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God;" the modern scientist says, "We can very well do without one."

Amongst the obvious consequences of the removal of faith from the earth Miss Cobbe enumerates the belittling and the carnalising of life, and the rendering it more cowardly and mean in its spirit. Aspiration, repentance, and prayer, together with patience, sympathy, and charity, will also vanish. The morals of evolution, which are involved in and needful to the survival of the fittest, mean "the remorseless crushing of the unfit." The strong and the gifted shall inherit the earth, and the weak and simple go to the wall. Blessed are the merciless, for they shall obtain useful knowledge. Blessed are the self-asserting, for theirs is the kingdom of this world, and there is no world after it." There are many wrongs in the world as it is, waiting the time when they shall be righted; many miseries waiting the day when they shall be removed; many evils and excrescences which need to be and shall be ultimately conquered and cut off; but "a faithless world," instead of presenting these in the strong relief afforded by the presence of Christian influence and teaching, would show us all the curse unmixed with blessing, and plunge mankind into a darkness which might and would be felt.

The Charity Organisation Society has just held its annual meeting at Willis's Rooms, but with closed doors, a disturbance having been caused by the attempt of some to gain admission who were forcibly kept out. A great deal of dissatisfaction exists with the proceedings of this Society, Dr. Lee, who succeeded in gaining admission to the meeting, only representing the feeling of many when he asserted his belief, derived from experience, that in very many cases the society did a great deal of harm instead of good. He thought if it had a faithful name, the society should be called the Charity Abolition Society. Looking at the facts of the case, it is by no means to be regretted that the resolution adopting the annual report, and expressing confidence in the work of the organisation, met with opposition, and failed to secure unanimous support. This Society, which claims to be heard in criticism of others, itself manifestly and deservedly lacks the confidence necessary to the position of a censor.

The Right Hon. W. E. Forster, M.P., in the course of a characteristic address on the subject of education at Bradford, warned the students to whom he spoke against relying for success in life upon technical knowledge apart from moral virtues. Referring to the strain of present-day life upon those who have to take part in its contests, Mr. Forster said "if they did not keep the faculty of their uneducated fathers and mothers, if they did not keep their old Yorkshire endurance, energy, and perseverance, the knowledge gained at the elementary school, or the technical institution, would stand them in little stead in the battle of life." It is the fashion with some of the youth of modern times to sneer at the "slow coaches," as they term those of a former generation, but "slow and sure" is a proverb not to be despised even in days of electric speed. Our fathers might have been the better for our higher culture, but their sons cannot afford to lack their steadiness and faculty of plodding on in spite of difficulties.

About twenty years ago a series of articles appeared in these columns entitled "A Tour in South Wales." They were written by Dr. Elwin, whose companion was Mr. Oscar T. Snelling, who was then a young man in delicate health. The result of this tour was the re-establishment of Mr. Snelling's health and the establishment of the Swansea Gospel Mission, in the Gospel Hall, Orchard-street, where three week-night services are still regularly held. The Sunday services have been conducted for many years past in the Albert Hall (the largest in the town), where about 2000 persons are gathered every Sunday evening under the sound of the Gospel. Among the most pleasing results has been the conversion of many elderly men, a number over sixty years of age having lately been led to Christ, these being now some of the brightest and best workers.

A petition to the House of Commons, containing 11,400 Maori signatures, requesting redress of certain grievances, has been prepared for presentation next Session. All parties of the native race have joined in the movement, the spirit of which may be inferred from the words of the Chief, who says, in a letter to Sir F. D. Jervois, the Governor, "It is now known that the Maori race are orphans; therefore, they seek their first parents—viz., England." Our Government needs no little amount of wisdom and prudence to enable it to judge and act righteously in relation to its numerous Colonial dependencies.

Our Tract Fund is £23 9s. 3d. in arrear. The subscriptions since our last statement have been £4 4s. 5d., and the grants to distributors have amounted to £27 13s. 8d., accounted for at wholesale prices. Many of our readers are anxious to distribute, and could give away many thousands of Gospel invitations. We think that those who cannot become distributors themselves may be glad to enable others to do so.

The Postmaster-General has issued a request that the public will refrain from giving postmen beer or spirits at the Christmas season. This has often proved a source of danger to many, and resulted in much evil. This request ought to be received by all law-abiding citizens as a peremptory command, both for the sake of the men and the service they are engaged in. Our postmen are, as a rule, well worthy of acknowledgment, and those who desire to show them kindness may easily do so without placing temptation in their way.

The centenary of the famous lexicographer, Dr. Samuel Johnson, occurred on the 14th inst., and has given rise to many reminiscences of that familiar and noteworthy personage in English history. It is proposed to signalise the event by endowing a scholarship in his name in connection with Pembroke College, Oxford, where the learned Doctor for some time studied. He lived long enough and well enough to make a mark upon his country and race not to be effaced, and well worthy of perpetuating in such a way as has been suggested.

Christmas-tide is once more upon us; to many it will bring its usual accompaniments of family joy and social blessedness. To many others, and this year to an unusually large number of the working population, it comes attended with want and suffering. While wishing our readers who are in circumstances of comfort and prosperity all the sanctified enjoyments a bountiful Providence puts within their reach, let us remember that true joy is only realised when the heart is open and generous in its sympathies. The advent of Him who came to give his life a ransom for many, and to minister to human need, cannot be better celebrated than by adopting his principles of loving self-sacrifice, and imitating his gracious example.

An article in The Daily News of December 18, furnishes a description of "London at Night," of a nature very similar to "Pictures for the Heart," which appeared in our last issue, telling of the Sunday early breakfasts for the destitute now being given in connection with the Congregational Union. It is indeed gratifying to know that temporary, and frequently permanent relief is thus being given to so many sufferers. The article in our morning contemporary closes with the following instructive and suggestive paragraph :—

"Two facts have been made prominent in the course of the movement—one is the number of apparently honest young men who cannot find anything to do, and the other the great number who are from the provinces. From the country districts the peasantry appear to be streaming into the great towns, there to swell the numbers of the poor. Nobody wants them, nobody cares for them, and they stumble about the hard streets, day after day and night after night, with the bitterness of despair in their hearts. No remedy will be thoroughly successful until some means are devised of attracting the peasantry back to the rural districts."

A GLANCE AT MR. MOODY'S HOME.

[BY A CORRESPONDENT.]

IT is a sort of public secret that the greatest of modern evangelists is brimful of expectation regarding the rising race. He loves children, and does not limit his interested attention to his own family, although that circle is verily a blessing from heaven.

When returning the other day to England from a visit to the Rocky Mountains, I was urged by a well-known Christian worker in New York to make a détour to Quebec, for the purpose of making a call at the celebrated Northfield Home. I confess I had not a little curiosity concerning the home surroundings of one in whose remarkable work in London I had but a few months previously taken a very lively interest.

Idle would it be to dilate upon my all-night and most wearisome journey, or even upon the natural charm of the spot which attracted me. The readers of THE CHRISTIAN are, in a sense, from repeated and various visits described by enthusiastic admirers of the popular evangelist, almost as familiar with the French-looking wooden-built villa in the sweet little Massachusetts valley, as with their own centres of domestic felicity. It really is pretty, especially when surveyed in the autumnal tinting season during which my American travel was spent.

Miss Moody, who received me in the temporary absence of her father, is glad when visitors express their admiration: she feels the oppressive quietude, and she wrapped up her concentrated little protest in my cheery Irish suggestion that Northfield was a pleasant place in which to be buried!

Mr. Rankine, the schoolmaster, telephoned from the study to the boys' school, about three miles off, instructions to have horse and buggy at the door about two o'clock; and when the conveyance came he drove me round the several mansion-looking school-houses which dot the Northfield landscape. Within easy distance stand the seminaries and dormitories used by lady pupils. No wonder they and the boys compete so keenly in admiration for their benefactor. Of comfort and convenience there was enough to satisfy the most fastidious, and all as clean as a new pin, thanks to the consecrated oversight of the Lady Principal. Apart from capital cost, the maintenance expenses of these institutions runs, I gathered, to an average of some 170 dollars per scholar, towards which not more than from 50 to 100 dollars is paid by the individual thus advantaged. Mr. Marshall, who is Mr. Moody's locum tenens, was controlling the building operations of an additional beautiful structure, which, it is hoped, will be opened by special services early in the new year. He was particular in his descriptions to me even of the stone employed, and has succeeded in leaving the impression that the work was not a mere flash-in-the-pan, but would, by the mercy of God, go on to the very crack of doom. The new pile will accommodate some eighty girls, and there is every prospect of its being speedily filled, so numerous are the applicants. They come from all over America, while the boys, who form the responsible charge of Mr. Rankine, are gathered from almost every part of the civilised world. Manchester in particular has furnished a good complement.

Of the ultimate object of these fine educational institutions, nobody acquainted with their founder can doubt, any more than they will remain sceptical concerning its fulfilment. God's glory is their direct aim: the conversion and dedication of youthful hearts to Christian life and service. Already fruit is appearing. The missionary field is, and will be, very largely the outlet. About seventy boys are now in training, their ages ranging respectively from 11 to 20. The hundreds of acres of arable and pasture-land attaching to the schools are utilised for supply and farming instruction purposes. Boys and girls' schools are under separate bodies of trustees. Several of the Moody family are members, including the good wife and mother.

The little white-looking Congregational Church is taxed by the body of pupils who regularly worship there, the service being memorial of not far distant Plymouth Rock in its simplicity. Mr. Moody not infrequently takes the service when he is "in residence," and the pastor is in hearty sympathy.

THE BERBERS OF NORTH AFRICA.

A PLEA FOR PRAYER.

I WRITE from Tangier, Morocco, whither I have come with my family, that we may devote ourselves to spreading the sweet savour of the Name of Jesus among the Berber peoples of this region. Again and again the columns of THE CHRISTIAN have been opened to the advocacy of the claims of this noble, interesting, accessible, and yet strangely neglected people, much that has appeared being from the pen of that devoted pioneer worker among them, Mr. George Pearse. It was from its pages, read in my far-away home in North Carolina, in the United States, that I gleaned the first information of them; thus an interest was awakened that suffered me not to rest until I gave myself, and, as far as I might, my children, to missionary effort among them. I covet the prayers of English Christians. I desire that many shall take pleasure in this people, and pray and toil for their peace. Labourers are needed. The co-operation of the Lord's remembrancers is needed beyond expression. Therefore, I hope to say an occasional word on behalf of the work here.

These Berbers, or Kabyles, are not to be confounded with either the negroes of Central Africa or with the Arabs who have migrated from the East. As in colour and physique they contrast with the first, so in moral character and mental calibre they contrast with the last. They are the primæval possessors of North Africa—a superior race, of free and indomitable spirit, remarkably free from that race and religious prejudice that builds up an almost inpenetrable barrier between most other Mohammedans and the Gospel. Of all virgin missionary soils within my knowledge this is one of the greatest ripeness and promise.

I enter upon my work with much joy and large hopes. My wife and eldest daughter are co-workers with me; and I look forward to my other seven children (who have been given to the Lord from their birth for foreign Mission work, and all the oldest of whom are already the Lord's), taking their places one by one as toilers here for Christ and the Berbers.

A keen and widespread interest in this ancient race has sprung up in America. In England, too, many are awaking to the fact that the foreign Mission field, nearest of all others to their favoured isle, is, of all others, perhaps, the most wholly neglected and unevangelised. Speaking, while in London, to Mr. Spurgeon's congregation in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, I turned to the great preacher, and asked him if they were praying specially for any Mission work in North Africa, this land where once the Gospel so flourished. He replied they were not. I proposed this Mission for their ardent and constant prayers. The petition that followed from the lips of Mr. Spurgeon brought a present benediction with it, and its fragrance will linger in the halls of memory while life lasts. The proposal I made to that church I make to you, beloved Christian reader. Pray for us. Then, when you hear of blessing upon the Berbers, your spirit will be refreshed by the consciousness of answered prayer.

E. F. BALDWIN,
Missionary to the Berbers.

Tangier, Morocco.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For one who is in the depths of despair, thinks she has sinned beyond forgiveness, and says that God cannot pardon her. That she may be led to look to and trust in Jesus. ——For a son, a young missionary in South India, who is ill, that he may be kept close to the Cross of Christ. ——Five sisters and one brother in great perplexity as to their future path in life, having recently lost a blessed mother, desire prayer for guidance.

ONE OF LONDON'S SICK POOR.

[This case was mentioned in THE CHRISTIAN of Nov. 27, in a notice of the Medical Mission, 199, Whitecross-street, E.C. Further inquiry has revealed these details.]

THE STORY AS TOLD TO ME.

IT was a terrible case, sir,
A tumour had seized its prey,
And was weighing the woman downward,
While labouring day by day.

She was a poor young widow,
Who had lost her support in life:
So alone, with her five small children,
And her needle, she met the strife.

They were all of them under twelve, sir,
And so to the School Board went;
While a neighbour paid for the baby,
To our nursery daily sent.

When last we examined the woman,
So scanty her clothing seemed,
That we gave her a warm shawl wrapper,
And a moment her dim eyes beamed.

Two or three days of labour
Is all that her strength can bear:
And then in her bed she lingers,
With only the parish fare.

We talked of an operation—
She hadn't the time, she said;
For where would her children go to,
And who would provide their bread?

Yet the pain of that growing tumour,
And the want of sufficient food,
Is more than I dare to think of,
For we cannot do what we would.

What do they live on? Listen!
She isn't a beggar, sir:
There's a kind of an independence
That kindles respect for her.

I knew that she needed feeding,
So offered a meal one day:
But she said they had had a dinner,
In her modest and quiet way.

And what do you think, when questioned,
Their dinner that day had been?
A single penn'orth of herrings,
Divided six mouths between.

The other eve in the drizzle,
And just as the shadows fell,
Her six-year-old came over
For the soup that they like so well.

We gave him a large jug brimming:
But lest it should scald the boy,
We sent a young helper with him,
To share in the children's joy.

She found them alone in the darkness,
Famishing, wet, and cold.
"Have you had tea?" she asked them—
Only bread by the parish doled.

Set out the cups. Poor children!
Cups were a novelty there;
So a saucer and broken basin,
Divided to each a share.

And didn't their faces brighten
And didn't the soup get praise?
Little they studied the vessels,
As they fed in a glad amaze.

One, only two years old, sir,
They said it was good to see
The way that that youngster swallowed
The liquor they all called tea.

* * * * * *

Children, this is my story.
Now, who will their pennies give,
To help to buy health and comfort,
That mothers like these may live?

Can you not ask your parents
And friends both near and far,
To send some help to the Mission,
Where many such sick ones are?

WILLIAM LUFF.

A MISSIONARY LEVEE.

LAST week there was held in London a meeting, the echoes of which shall resound as we believe, throughout the four quarters of this round globe. Where was it convened? Not in the lordly halls of Buckingham Palace, or in any of the spacious drawing-rooms of Britain's proud aristocracy; but in a very humble, unpretending, low-roofed apartment in plebeian and busy Spitalfields. Indeed, it was no other than the gathering of Christian workers whom Miss Macpherson receives month by month at her Home of Industry. The habitués of that delectable spot have seen under its roof many a memorable assembly; but, with a tolerably long experience, we have seen few, even there, that would compare with the meeting of Wednesday week for intense and all-embracing interest, and for unmistakable tokens of the Divine presence and power. One friend remarked at the close, with a long-drawn sigh of satisfaction, that it had been to him a sa little glimpse of heaven upon the earth.

Passing through the familiar portals of the Home of Industry, early in the tea hour, we could see at a glance that something special was afoot. The social cup was being handed round in one of the basement rooms, instead of upstairs, asaforetime. The company was larger than we are wont to see, with an unusual proportion of young men. Presently we discovered that these were students from the Metropolitan hospitals and members of the Medical Prayer Union, who had come by special invitation from "mine hostess," Miss Macpherson. Leaving her in the midst of these young medicals, expatiating on the rescue and other work carried on under her hallowed roof, we proceed to the upper room, where a band of neatly-attired and well-favoured lads and lasses of a tender age are engaging the closest and most interested attention. They are going through their facings—sweetly singing some homely "action songs," Christmas carols, and what-not. They look so bright and bonny, and sing and gesticulate with such graceful self-possession, that no one ignorant of the place and its ways would dream of their being East-end waifs, but yesterday, or last week, or last month, plucked from the jaws of an earthly hell. They are destined for transplantation in the spring to the broad and fertile fields of Canada; that land of the setting sun, as well as these sprightly youngsters, must be congratulated on the prospect.

There is so much more to be recorded that we must pass over Miss Macpherson's inimitable description and cross-examination of two of the boys, who had been added to her growing family only the night before. The little fellows stood the test like heroes; we can but pray that they and their fortunate foster brothers and sisters will prove worthy of the love and the tender care that are now being lavished upon them.

THE MISSIONARIES' MEETING.

It is meeting time. The bairns are marched off to bed, and Mr. HUDSON TAYLOR takes the president's chair of a crowded company. After a song of praise, Mr. EUGENE STOCK offers prayer, and then in a neat little speech refers to the sympathy between work at home and work abroad that such a gathering indicates. China, he tells us, is just now under a cloud, and many of the native Christians are suffering in consequence of the hostilities between their country and France. Nevertheless the converts are standing firm, and others are turning from idols to serve the true God. Only the other day, almost within sight of the place lately occupied by the French fleet, 500 people in one village went to the missionary asking for Bibles; they have handed over an "ancestral hall" for the purposes of Christian worship. Surely that is a bright rift in the dark cloud.

Before calling on the next speaker, the Chairman interpolates the suggestion that the Throne of the Most High God should be besieged by constant and importunate prayer for a termination of this discreditable war between France and China. Speaking of the needs of France, he throws out the hint that those who have a knowledge of the French language would do well to ask themselves whether this gift has not been bestowed upon them to use for God in a country situated at our very doors.

But now Mr. STANLEY SMITH, the quondam Cambridge athlete, of boating celebrity, stands before us, and deeply stirs the meeting with the unanswerable question: Is not Jesus worthy to be served with something more than sentimental talk—with deeds of devotion worthy of the love He has manifested towards us? If we could look down on this earth from some vantage point, to find out the darkest spot that most needs the presence of Gospel torch-bearers, assuredly we would not pitch on England. Yet we act as if it were so. The Church of God in these islands is suffering from spiritual indigestion—taking in and taking in, without giving out. If there were more spiritual exercise, there would be far less jealousy and division and strife. The heart of David Livingstone was brought from Central Africa, and many followed it to its last resting-place in England's great Abbey. If that heart could speak it would have said, "Follow me not to this cathedral, but to my grave away in yonder heathen land." Young men, where are you going to spend your one life? Will you not live it so that at the last you can look Jesus straight in the face? Here was the testimony of a young man during our recent meetings at Cambridge: "Jesus said, 'If ye love me, keep my commandments.' I love him. He commands me to go and preach the Gospel, and I am going."

Another young Cambridge athlete, Mr. C. T. STUDD, of cricketing renown, follows with a most touching and impressive account of the way in which he became a candidate for missionary labours in distant China, whither he, too, is about to go. It was a simple, artless recital of the steps by which the Lord had restored his soul from coldness and unfruitfulness to unreserved consecration, and to a peace that passeth all understanding. It was at Mr. McCarthy's recent farewell, before returning to China, he was led definitely to see that the Lord would have him spend his life as an ambassador of Christ in China. There were many of his dearest earthly friends who frowned upon this resolve, but the word of the Lord had come to him, and he must obey.

The Chairman again interposed with some words of affectionate exhortation, addressed chiefly to the medical students in the meeting. What joy it would give him to see 100 of them going out as medical missionaries to China, where they could have fifteen counties apiece in which to practise the double art; if that was not enough probably the half of Thibet could be thrown into the bargain. Another hundred could find a wide and open field among the vast populations of India. What were the honours and emoluments of the profession at home, compared with the joy and the privilege of serving God and their generation in these needy and neglected lands?

It was a remarkable story that Mr. WIGSTONE had to tell of his experiences in Spain. To show the dense spiritual darkness of that land, cursed as it is with the blight of Popery, he told how a priest had gravely essayed to exorcise, by the reading of Latin prayers, some pigs supposed to be possessed with devils. The incantations were of no avail, for all the pigs died. Mr. Wigstone's narrative of the commencement of Gospel work by himself and Mr. Blamire in Corunna, the obstacles they encountered, and the marvellous success that followed their persevering efforts, constituted a chapter in the romance of Missions that ought to be preserved to posterity, but we have not now space for details. As he and his wife go back to benighted Spain, we are sure they will have the fervent prayers at least of all who heard him on this occasion.

An equally wonderful tale of direct guidance from God, of difficulties encountered and of faith rewarded, came from the lips of Miss ANSTEY, who related in outline her experiences among the famine orphans at Colar, in the territory of Mysore. This history, we do not doubt, is fresh in the memories of our regular readers, as we have given it in these pages from time to time. It is twenty years since Miss Anstey first set foot in India. In 1877 she went out for the second time, with her bodily health wondrously restored, as she believes, in answer to the prayer of faith. Now, after a brief visit to Great Britain, she goes back once more to spend and be spent for her Master among the dusky children of Southern India. The blessing of God will surely go with her and before her, and she shall lack no good thing in this devoted service.

The story of his recent evangelisings in South Russia was re-told by Dr. BAEDEKER; this we have given on another page, and therefore need not repeat it here. His words were with great power and with the demonstration of the Holy Ghost. There is a great stirring among the Jews, said he. The times of the Gentiles are fast running out, and the Jew is upon our heels. We are only playing at evangelising. Instead of the great body of Christians going forth to the dark corners of the earth, and the solitary ones remaining at home, the process is reversed. We need no special call to go, but we do need a special call to stay. If we do not speedily buy up the time that yet remains, it may be too late. The Jew may again be put in possession of his ancient inheritance, and then our day of special privilege will be gone.

After this it seemed fitting and proper that Miss BARLEE should be called on to speak. She has for some time been labouring for the conversion of foreign Jews resident in the East-end of London. Now the burden is laid upon her to go and spend the remainder of her days in carrying the Gospel of Jesus Christ to the Jews in Jerusalem. Her farewell words were few and halting, for her heart was too full for measured utterance. Indeed, as she tried to tell something of what the Lord had enabled her to do among the chosen people, 40,000 of whom are dwellers in the East-end, the memories of the past were too much for her, and she fairly broke down in the middle of her address. But it was one of the most powerful and affecting of all the thrilling words of that memorable evening, and it was a great relief when Miss Macpherson poured out her pent-up feelings in prayer for our departing sister, and for a like devotion to descend on the other workers among Jews at home.

Still there was "more to follow," though the time was flitting all too fleetly by. As the Chairman observed, the time seems to go faster at Miss Macpherson's than anywhere else. In a brief word Miss De BROEN, who happened to be present, put in a very earnest plea for poor Paris and the surrounding villages, from many of which she is receiving loud calls to take up medical mission work. Her womanly heart was swelling with emotion at what she had heard of other fields, and yet she could not but think of the claims of that in which God had so signally blessed her labours in the past.

Rev. W. CASSELL has relinquished a curacy in the South of London to go to China as a missionary. He, too, had been greatly moved by the addresses that went before, and he besought his young brethren and sisters to think of the perishing millions abroad. Let us be like the lad who brought to the Saviour the five loaves and two fishes for the feeding of the hungry multitude: let us bring to God our weakness and He will bless it abundantly.

Last of all, but certainly not least of all, came Mr. HUDSON TAYLOR, who read the angelic message that came down to earth on the first Christmas morning: "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Yet how many people there are who have never yet heard of these good tidings. If we Christians were all willing to do what we could, five years would not elapse before the angels' words would come true. Mr. Taylor proceeded to speak of the joys of missionary work among the heathen, and of the personal loss sustained by those who stay at home when they might go forth as ambassadors of the Cross. And with these solemn words ringing in our ears we were dismissed to our homes.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE AT BOURNEMOUTH.

THE Blue Ribbon Temperance Union formed here during Mr. R. T. Booth's visit to this country has continued to carry on an active and aggressive work in the town. A week of special meetings has lately been held in the theatre, Albert-road, in which many prominent speakers and workers have taken part. Among the former may be mentioned Canon Wilberforce, Canon Leigh, Rev. E. Payson Hammond, Rev. H. Pelham Stokes, Mrs. Hind Smith, Miss Wingfield Digby, &c. Good service was rendered by the sacred solos of Mrs. Ward Poole, of London. The audiences were good, and upwards of 260 new abstinence pledges were recorded during the Mission.

At the first meeting Mr. Payson Hammond remarked on the growth of Temperance sentiment in this country since his previous visit; he urged that, besides signing the pledge, it was essential that the heart should be given to God, and his strength invoked, in order to keep it.

Miss Wingfield Digby, at the second meeting, spoke with much force on the power of sympathy. She said she had twice visited all the public-houses in Bournemouth, and had received the kindest treatment. What she saw determined her to work harder than ever in the Temperance cause.

In one of his eloquent and stirring speeches, Canon Wilberforce spoke of the great issues that had come from the use of humble means, as encouragement to all to take part in the work. He strenuously argued for the abolition of the baneful liquor traffic, and stoutly defended the wearing of the blue.

NOTES AND INCIDENTS BY A WORKER.

The following incidents of the Mission are sent us by a friend.

One said, "Of all Canon Wilberforce's wonderful words, one sentence has been everything to me, 'The Lord has need of you.' I live on that."

Many earnest Christian men amongst the Blue Ribbon Choir of the Mission said, "We can never forget it; we wake up and think over those soul-stirring addresses," and one man said, "Depend on't, the Canon's words can't be forgotten; they have made many think who never thought before; and when they come to my own mind at night, I am forced to get up and sing and pray."

Perhaps one of the most cheering sights of the Mission to some of the workers was a poor man, neatly dressed, quietly seated beside a tidy, worn-looking little woman, his wife, on Sunday evening, listening reverently to the Gospel speaking, and joining in the hymn-singing. That man had come in on the Thursday before to the evening meeting only half sober, but signed the pledge, and perhaps the thought was with some, "Will he keep it?" and most surely the prayer of many a worker was, "Lord keep him." Sunday night seemed the foretaste of the answer.

The principal feature of this Mission has been to strengthen the things that remain, to bring back many Christians to "the wearing of the Blue," and to rekindle the sense of the great need of continuous effort amongst the Christian workers.

Alas! one sad case occurred showing how Christians may hinder this, the Lord's work, and which should be told for warning. A poor drunkard who had nearly signed on Thursday night came back on Sunday, content to go on drinking, because at an evangelistic service he had heard, "No need to sign the pledge; no use, get Christ first!" So he said, "I wait till I get Christ." And yet, owning the power of the drink over him, and that he had tempted thousands to drink besides, he boasted. "Cut it off and cast it from thee" seems left out of some Christians' creed. To do and to be means true faith in Christ, and can alone come from a God-given power; but we are to stretch out the hand of our faith to receive it, and so surely the Lord enters in, to dwell, and to be "the hope of glory."

One more striking incident, and a solemn one, occurred. Canon Wilberforce, speaking on Wednesday evening of the changefulness of all things here, said words to this effect: "Many of us here now may be dead before this time next year; very soon, some of us, perhaps." On Thursday night the news was brought of a navvy killed that morning on the new railway who had been present at our meetings on Monday, Tuesday, and probably Wednesday night. A solemn awe and hush fell upon everyone as Rev. J. Perrin told the fact, and with all his pleading, spiritual power brought it home, with its weighty warning, from the sudden solemn call of the dead man lying with the little bit of blue upon his coat; "and that was all we knew," he said. How loudly should this speak to those about to put it on that night!

DARK BRAZIL.

A CORRESPONDENT at Berwick has sent us two letters received from persons resident in Brazil. One or two extracts may interest our readers, and stimulate prayer for those of their fellow-countrymen who have gone abroad, to lands where the lack of Gospel privileges presents a strange and painful contrast to those enjoyed at home. They are of value also as furnishing instances of personal effort in evangelistic work, persevered in amid surrounding darkness, indifference, and superstition. In one letter the writer says:—

"I address a small meeting here, in the suburbs of this city (Rio de Janeiro), at which from seven to fourteen people meet. I also spend as much time as I can selling Scriptures and other evangelical literature in the streets. Last month I sold 6 Bibles, 27 Testaments, and 38 other small books. There are, in this city of 350,000 inhabitants, one English Episcopal Church, one Evangelical Portuguese Church (begun by a Scotchman, of Edinburgh), one American Presbyterian, and one Methodist Episcopal Church. The Baptists are coming here this month. It is difficult to get the people to make religion a matter of business. Roman Catholic prejudice and unbelieving indifference are our greatest enemies. We need more labourers who are better qualified to cope with such odds. Those we have are mostly beginners, but will doubtless make their presence felt ere long by their preaching and holy living, as they are excellent men."

The second letter, dated August 6, is written from Colonia do Assunguy: "I am under great obligation to you for continually sending me the tracts, The Christian, and Mr. Spurgeon's sermons. I am sorry to tell you that here we have no outward means of grace. The Sabbath is totally disregarded, and made the principal day for going into the township to make purchases, as they say they cannot lose time on other days. As to the English and Irish and all foreign settlers the great question with them is who can make the most money. That seems the only thing they live for—in fact, for which they are destroying themselves body and soul. The American Presbyterian Society is doing a great work on the Campos, by their fortnightly publication, so that many are being led to seek after God, if haply they may find Him.

"I find it difficult to make much headway with the Brazilians, except when they are ill. As they have no doctor here, and I have been led to study homœopathy, and thus save their bodies, I have a good opportunity to try and turn them from the worship of their saints to Him who can save to the uttermost. Now that such showers of blessing are falling full and free around you in your highly-favoured land, please pray for us, that we may hold fast. It is hard work here, struggling with doubts and fears, and stemming the tide; but we take comfort, knowing there is no restraint with the Lord to save by many or by few."

RELIEF OF PERSECUTED JEWS.

SIR,—In view of the greatly increasing distress among the Jews, and of the earnest appeals addressed to us, we desire to carry out at once the work of providing work for Jews in the Land of Promise. Intolerable oppression is driving Jews out of Roumania, Russia, and other countries. They seek in the Holy Land the shelter denied them elsewhere.

In Jerusalem there are nearly 20,000 Jews, of whom not one-tenth can obtain work. There are several thousands in Galilee and elsewhere in Palestine in great need. We ask for means to enable us to give employment at Jerusalem where some land near the city is at once available, till increase of funds shall give us the means to enable them to form themselves into colonies on their own responsibility.

We desire also to help the Jewish families in Galilee, who have asked our aid, in forming a settlement there under favourable conditions; also to make final provision for the Jews in Cyprus. Donors are requested to state which of these objects they wish to assist. The agricultural season has begun. In order to secure the crops, and avoid having to wait till harvest of the year after next, we ask for speedy help.

STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

THIS Society held its ninety-ninth annual meeting on Monday, December 15, at the Mansion House, under the presidency of Lord Mayor Nottage. The Report, read by Mr. Clarence Smith, stated that the income for the past year amounted to £1586, which fell short of the expenditure several hundred pounds; to meet this a loan had been necessary, as well also as the sale of invested stock. The visitation and relief of the sick poor at their own homes by an unpaid agency, consisting of 250 Christian visitors, is the definite object and unremitting work of the Society. The visitors have done their best to alleviate the sorrows of the stricken poor in all parts of the Metropolis. They are often constrained to give out of their personal resources through lack of other funds. During the year, 3774 cases have been relieved, 21,000 visits have been paid by the visitors, and £1300 have been distributed of the funds, exclusive of clothing, &c., and supplemental gifts of the visitors.

Rev. Canon Fleming, in an eloquent speech, commended the Society to public support as one that was old, tried, and blessed of God. No amount of statesmanship could remove the evils sought to be remedied by the Institution whose claims they were met to advocate, and whose agents were used by God to be the purveyors of his gifts to others.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes called attention to the fact that the Society respected neither creed nor nationality; like the Saviour, who held pardon in one hand and a loaf in the other, they combined the spiritual and the physical.

Mr. Sheriff Faudel Phillips, in an admirable and stirring address, said the true mantle of charity will ever descend on the poor and needy around us, and should never be withheld from those who are not one with us in religious views. With considerable graphic power he pourtrayed the poor foreigner, a stranger in London, and passed a fitting eulogy on the Christian visitors whose voluntary and unpaid services were worthy of our highest commendation.

Other addresses, urging continued and increased support, were given by Dr. Harvey, Mr. J. H. Anderson, Mr. Puleston, M.P., and Mr. Alderman Whitehead. The last speaker mentioned some remarkable instances of help rendered by the visitors, which had been the means of preserving the recipients from ruin.

SAMARITAN WORK.

AMONG the agencies doing good work in this great city, the London Samaritan Society deserves an honourable place. Some brief extracts from the new report will, we trust, enlist the interest and sympathy of our readers :—

"THE BITTER CRY."

"In these days we hear not a little of the inexorable laws of social and political economy, of "the survival of the fittest," and of many other pseudo-scientific axioms that men propound as excuses for leaving the poor to languish in their poverty. We are not ambitious of graduating in that school of thought. The great law that actuates the Christian worker is the law of love for the lost, of pity for the perishing, and of self-denial, that those who are in sore straits may speedily be succoured and strengthened. From day to day we are in receipt of multiplied proofs that our many kind helpers are prompted by the same principles of action. The 'Bitter Cry' is no new one to those who, like ourselves, have for years past been straining every nerve to alleviate in some measure the misery of our destitute neighbours and fellow-citizens of this vast metropolis. We rejoice, nevertheless, in the quickened sense of responsibility and the deeper solicitude that have lately been shown on this subject, and we sincerely trust that the wave of public feeling may not recede, but may gather volume till everything is done that human wisdom can devise and sanctified effort can accomplish, for the removal of the evils that now afflict the lower strata of society in London and our large provincial towns. While God spares us, and, through his stewards, continues to supply us with the means, we shall covet a share in this 'Samaritan' work."

CLOTHING AND FEEDING THE CHILDREN.

"During the inclement winter months the suffering children are our special care. In many poor households, even when the parents are doing the best for their offspring that circumstances will allow, the clothing of the children is one of the most serious items in the family expenditure. Where the head and bread-winner of the family has been removed by death, or neglects his paternal responsibilities (which too often happens), the case of the children is indeed an evil one. No greater act of Christian kindness can be done in such instances than to relieve the widowed mother of a burden that presses so heavily upon her by timely gifts of clothing and boots for the children. The question of feeding is even more important. With plenty of wholesome and nutritious food the young life will thrive, and with adequate exercise the child will often defy the elements, in spite of the scantiest of covering. With pangs of hunger gnawing at its vitals, the feeble little bodies fall an easy prey to all the ailments that haunt those districts where the poor are congregated. With every physical advantage, the strain upon young children under the present educational system is severe enough, and there is, in many quarters, a loud cry as to the evils of over-pressure in our elementary schools. It may, in some instances, be exaggerated, but is largely borne out by facts, though these are, from obvious reasons, frequently suppressed. We are desirous of continuing our strenuous efforts to cope with the evil, by providing clothing, boots, and wholesome meals where these are seen to be really needed, and where the parents are unable to meet the need."

SUNDAY MORNING FREE BREAKFASTS.

"This is another branch of the Mission which has proved itself to be of the most incalculable value. During the past season, as far as the funds placed in our hands would permit, we supplied Christian workers in the neediest parts of East, South, and Central London, with the means of giving a warm and nourishing Sunday morning meal to those whom they gather together on these occasions to hear the Gospel. It is a matter of much doubt if many of the poor pariahs of society could be induced to enter these Mission halls, unless they expected to get some temporal relief. A starving man is not usually in a mood to sit and listen to the Gospel preacher. Besides, we have the high example of our Lord and Saviour in feeding the hungry multitude; and one of his apostles plainly teaches that such acts of charity and kindness are the most tangible proofs of the reality of our own faith. Apart, therefore, from the question of results, our duty is clear in this matter; and we feel sure from past experience that our kind and generous helpers need not argument of ours to convince them of this. But there is no lack of results, as our correspondence with the workers who superintend the breakfasts clearly shows. Nothing could be more gratifying and touching than some of the statements we receive; we trust that while the need continues for this simple, but invaluable, method of relief, we shall be enabled to furnish it to a still more adequate extent."

Other branches of the work of the Society are referred to at length in the report; we trust many of our readers will send for a copy to Mr. J. J. Jones, at the offices, 57, Ludgate-hill, E.C.

WORK AMONGST THE TRAMPS.

DEAR SIR,—Might I draw the attention of your readers to a department of religious work which in many of our large towns is sadly neglected, viz., caring for the poor visitants of the casual wards—the tramps who have not succeeded in obtaining work, or in begging enough money to pay for a night's lodging. It has been found that they are of a more deserving class than the frequenters of the low lodging-houses; professional beggars generally manage to obtain enough cash to pay for a bed.

Hearing of a man in Nottingham who was trying in a small, humble way to relieve, and, mostly, to cheer, these poor outcasts, I went to a room he has hired near the workhouse—an old malt kiln. There I saw thirty-five of them drinking eagerly some hot coffee, and eating dry biscuits, with a pitiable ravenousness. It was a cold, cheerless, wet morning. There were two women and four children, the rest being young-looking men, some with intelligent, open countenances. After the refreshments had been partaken, there was a little talk—you could not call it an address—full of personal experience, heartfelt sympathy, and practical advice; then followed a short prayer, during which many an eye was wet, and many a response uttered. Evidently some of them were following every word of the prayer.

Very often sad cases are met with of those who have been once in comfortable circumstances, but it would take too much space to record any of them. So far this work has been carried on at this gentleman's own expense, but his means are limited, and it must soon cease unless someone sends him help. If any of your readers could remit a small amount towards sustaining this work it would be thankfully received and well expended. The address is Mr. Craven, Thorneywood-lane, Nottingham.

Yours truly, A MINISTER'S WIFE.

BRISTOL MEDICAL MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The great need for such a society in Bristol may be understood from the fact that while the infirmary, the hospital, and other medical dispensaries are fully supplied with patients, the Bristol Medical Mission has a large share of patients; no poor person is excluded whose case comes within the range of the Mission's ability to receive them. The home is small, having only eleven beds, the object being rather to maintain the family character than that of a large or more public institution. It is not endowed, and has, therefore, no fixed income. Upwards of one thousand women have had the benefit of the home since it was opened. To maintain in efficiency the two dispensaries, at 7, Redcross-street and 34, Factory-street, Barton-hill, with the Convalescent Home, a sum of not less than £700 a year will be required. In order to increase the efficiency of the Missions Mr. S. S. McFarlane, L.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., has been appointed Assistant Medical Officer, and will enter on his duties on January 1. The last annual report will be forwarded on application to the Hon. Secretary, No. 7, Redcross-street, Bristol.

"NOT OF THE WORLD"

"They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world."

HE was here a "Man of sorrows,"
Yea, of sufferers the chief;
Bearing on his sinless shoulders
All the burden of our grief.
Lonely was the path He trod,
Separated unto God.

He was here as "one that serveth,"
Not a place whereon to lay
Weary head. A perfect servant,
Seeking only to obey.
"Meat" and "drink" the Father's will,
Is not this our portion still?

He was here the One rejected,
Object of reproach and scorn,
Mocked with royalty's grim symbol,
Crowned, but with a crown of thorn;
Kissed with treachery's false kiss,
Have we, then, forgotten this?

Can we court the world's caresses?
Can we smile upon its bands?
Shall the "Nazarite's" fair tresses
Linger in "Delilah's" hands?
"Strangers," "pilgrims" on the earth,
Must we share its hollow mirth?

If our ears have caught the echo
Of the sweet angelic song,
Shall we heed the siren singing
Of the giddy Christless throng?
Shall our blood-washed robes be found
On the world's enchanted ground?

Shall we struggle for its honours?
Courting its gilded gloss?
Must we win a "reputation,"
Where our Saviour found a cross?
Must we have its "harmless" glee,
And forget Gethsemane?

Shall we loath the heavenly "manna,"
Craving Egypt's coarser fare?
(What, so soon forget the bondage,
And the cruel thraldom there?)
Will the bitter murmur fall,
"Christ, and nothing else at all"?

Can we bear no separation?
Must the waves re-lifted be,
That the blood-bought hosts of Jesus
May re-cross the boundary?
Shall we turn from Christ again,
Choosing Sodom's fated plain?

Has the "altogether lovely"
Failed to fix our eager gaze?
Must we turn for entertainment,
To the world's unhallowed ways?
Is not HE our heart's desire?
Do we aught beside require?

Let the bitter truth be spoken,
Has our ardour grown so damp,
That we do not care to follow,
When He leads "without the camp?"
Blessed with joys, no tongue can tell,
Must we have the world as well?

Will the bride of Christ be faithless
To her long "remembered" vows?*
Will she disregard the wishes
Of her Lord, her kingly spouse?
Will she really choose a place,
Where she may not see his face?

. . . . . .

Search our hearts, O blessed Jesus,
Chaste and holy may they be;
Deaf to all the world's seductions,
Fully satisfied with Thee;
Help us, e'en on earth, to prove,
All our heaven is in thy love.

LUCY A. BENNETT.

Notices of Books, &c.

"RIGHT ABOUT FACE." 1s. S. W. Partridge. These friendly words for Christian soldiers are written in a gracious spirit by one who well knows the trials and temptations to which they are exposed.

COMING TO CHRIST: WHAT IS IT? By Mrs. W. E. LEGG. 1d. J. E. Hawkins. A clear and simple utterance, by one who has herself led many young people to Jesus, and can therefore speak from experience.

BEFORE I BEGAN TO SPEAK. By A BABY. Fleet Printing Works, 14, Whitefriars-street. The author of this plea for "the innocents" certainly understands them, and every mother and nurse will be the better for reading it.

KIRTON'S TEMPERANCE TALES. National Temperance Publication Depôt, 337, Strand. 1s. 6d. A bright volume of twelve stories by this well-known author, illustrated, showing very clearly the benefits of total abstinence and the fearful evils of drink. A capital present to put into the homes of the working classes, especially at this season of the year.

"THE BONNIE JEAN," by ANNIE S. SWAN (Scottish Temperance League, Glasgow) is a graphically depicted illustration of the sore evils that flow from indulgence in the thrice-accursed drink. With all the doughty blows that are being aimed at "the traffic," one might soon expect to see it tottering to its fall; that it has not already fallen shows how deeply rooted it is in the social life of the nation.

The latest issue of the new Penny "Biographical Series," published by The Religious Tract Society, is JAMES CLERK MAXWELL, F.R.S., by Dr. Macaulay, of "The Leisure Hour." Within a brief compass and in a popular style the life and work of this eminent Christian scientist are delineated. The circulation of the tractate among intellectual young men who may be agnostically disposed, would be productive of good results.

A Service of Song has been prepared by Mr. William Moodie, the well-known conductor of psalmody in Glasgow, founded on Dr. Norman Macleod's touching story, WEE DAVIE. Five of the songs are by our poet friend, Mr. W. T. McAuslane, and all have been wedded by Mr. Moodie to tuneful and appropriate airs. Many pleasant and profitable evenings may be spent by Christian singers in rendering this delightful Song Service to their poorer neighbours.

A very opportune moment has been chosen by Messrs. Alexander & Shepheard for the publication, in cheap form, of a well-written Memoir of Joseph Mazzini, the great Italian patriot and reformer, to which are appended two of his essays: "Thoughts upon Democracy," and "The Duties of Man." It were well for the toiling masses of Europe if all their popular leaders were actuated by such lofty and truly Christian principles as those which underlie these productions. An excellent portrait of Mazzini is given. (Price 6d.)

HELPS TO THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE. Henry Frowde, Oxford University Press. 3s. 6d. A more perfect compendium of valuable aids to Biblical study can scarcely be conceived than is furnished by this portable little volume. In addition to an introduction to each of the Books of Scripture, it gives well-written articles on the Ethnology, Natural History, and Antiquities of Bible Lands. A general Index, a Dictionary of Proper Names, and a Concordance are also furnished. Indeed, it forms in itself a small but copious reference library of sacred literature. No one who can obtain it should be without a copy; just now it may be wisely chosen as an admirable gift book to young and old.

MEMOIR OF LORD CONGLETON. By Mr. HENRY GROVES. J. F. Shaw & Co. This neat volume, with good portrait, is a reprint from Footsteps of Truth. The author tells us in the opening chapter, that he undertook the task of writing this memoir "for the comfort of many who have long been in the way, for the guidance of young disciples commencing their heavenly pilgrimage, and for the warning of some who are in danger of turning aside from a self-denying course once taken up in the freshness of first love." In this we think he has well succeeded. As far as our own experience of the subject of this sketch goes, we have no hesitation in saying, that with our departed friend it was not parties but purity, not sectarianism but saintship. He lived too separated a life not to be a marked man; and was indeed a true light in the pathway of Christian experience. We hope the book will be read very extensively.

THE MONTHLY INTERPRETER. Edited by the Rev. JOS. EXELL, M.A. Kegan Paul & Co. 1s. monthly. The contributors to this new theological magazine are such as to ensure a high order of merit in its articles; they are men of ripe scholarship, and well known in the field of Biblical criticism and research. The aim of the publishers is set forth, as being "to guide the Biblical, theological, scientific, philosophical, and social thinking of the day." Open discussion of topics is to be permitted "within reverent and reasonable limitations."

THE WORK OF THE HOLY GHOST IN THE PRESENT DISPENSATION. By JOHN HAWKER, M.A. Elliot Stock. Many volumes have been written on this momentous subject, but it is long since we read one with so much pleasure and profit as this has afforded. Thoughtful, lucid, and Scriptural, are terms truly descriptive of its contents, while the dispensational aspects of the theme are so treated as to give the work peculiar value as a guide to its intelligent study. It is a valuable manual of Bible teaching, and cannot fail to be great service to the cause of truth.

THE LORD OF THE MARCHES. By EMILY S. HOLT. 3s. 6d. J. F. Shaw & Co. Another chapter in the history of England in the olden time, which is also a story for the present time. A good deal of it refers to Ireland and the relations of England with the sister isle; the problem that vexed our rulers more than five centuries ago is yet unsolved. We need not say that Miss Holt clothes her historical facts in a narrative dress of the most intensely interesting kind. We thank her heartily for a book that will prove a charming and instructive ingleside companion these winter evenings.

ON THE HEALTHY MANUFACTURE OF BREAD. Bailliere, Tindall & Co. In this neat little volume Dr. B. W. Richardson enters a powerful plea for the more general use of aërated bread. He gives in detail the various processes of bread-making, with scientific notes on the chemical changes induced by fermentation. He maintains, for Dr. Dauglish's system, that it is healthier both for baker and consumer, less wasteful and more nourishing. The book is well worth reading and thinking about, whether the reader concurs in the doctor's conclusions or not. The last chapter is a Memoir of Dr. Dauglish, and a steel portrait of that gentleman makes an appropriate frontispiece.

SOME HERETICS OF YESTERDAY. By S. E. HERRICK, D.D. Sampson Low & Co. This volume consists of a series of lectures on twelve notable characters who have played conspicuous parts in the religious history of the world. Commencing with Teseler and the mystics, Dr. Herrick leads his readers through five centuries down to John Wesley, and shows how the current of spiritual life and religious progress has rolled on in ever increasing force and clearness since the Reformation began. His criticisms on the life and work of the leading reformers are discriminating and just, and his review of their career is admirably condensed. A capital book for all libraries intended for the use of the young.

IN SHAW'S HOME SERIES (J. F. Shaw & Co.) we have a selection of well-tried favourites, produced monthly in popular form at the low price of sixpence. NOS. 10 to 13 are NOTHING TO NOBODY, by Brenda, showing acute knowledge of the real conditions of life in the crowded slums of London, and altogether a taking story; WINIFRED, by L. E. Guernsey, an historical tale of the Seventeenth Century, cheerful, romantic, and quaintly told; THE THREE CHUMS, by M. L. Ridley, a healthy tale of schoolboy life of the present day. And MARCELLA OF ROME, by F. Eastwood; a truly beautiful story of the early Christian Church. We should like to see this popular style of cheap literature replacing some of the trash on the railway bookstalls.

RABIGER'S THEOLOGICAL ENCYCLOPÆDIA. T. & T. Clark. This new volume of Clark's Foreign Theological Library is the first of two which are to contain the Theological Encyclopædia of Rabiger, of which the translator says that it "has been very favourably noticed in the leading theological reviews of Germany." Theology as treated by the Germans is anything but an attractive study. Instead of keeping closely to the Word of God, and making the one standard of any theology worth the name "What saith the Scripture?" German writers think it necessary to study and examine carefully all the crude theories of sceptical and semi-infidel writers, especially those (and their name is legion) with whom Germany abounds. The well equipped theological student must, according to their ideas, be as well versed in all their scientific and philosophical theories as in the Word of God itself. To those who take an interest in "scientific theology," as it is called, this work of Rabiger's may be interesting, as it is unquestionably learned, but the unsoundness of his own standpoint is well objected to by the translator, who gives a valuable note disapproving, as well he may, of such a passage as this. We quote it to show that however learned Rabiger may be, he is no safe guide as to truth, for he is opposed to the Supremacy of Holy Scripture. His words are: "After the negative criticism had demolished the principles of the orthodox theology, and had demonstrated the untenableness of its principle of Scripture; philosophy, occupying a position above and apart from theological parties, won for itself the credit of delivering theology from that dissolution and decomposition which had wrought so effectually upon its system, and of securing a foundation, after the demolition of external authorities, upon those same authorities on which science in general rests." As we do not believe that Holy Scripture as an "external authority" has been or ever will be demolished, we can only hope and pray that we may be kept from such so-called theology as this book presents to us. We would that such books were left in their native German, and not translated to do injury to English readers.

TRAINING OF CHILDREN. By THE GENERAL OF THE SALVATION ARMY. 8 and 9, Paternoster-square. The design of this book is to show "how to make the children into saints and soldiers of Jesus Christ." The style is that of question and answer, the counsel given being of an almost exclusively Salvationist character, as for instance, when the marriage of soldiers outside the "Army" is set forth as evil, and the giving children to the Lord represented as a public dedication, in which the parents should dress the children in the Army's uniform, if possible, or at the least put on them a red band of some kind. Saved children are represented as finding bodily exercise and stimulus to their natural spirits, as well as indescribable pleasure, in a good march, with or without the stirring strains of the Army band; while for recreation they are told that parading the streets and roads, to sell the War Cry and Little Soldier, is better than playing at leap-frog and other games of the kind. Interspersed with all this are a multitude of good and useful hints as to the mental, moral, and physical training of children.

CHILDREN'S BOOKS.

FRIENDS AND NEIGHBOURS: A Story for Children. 2s. T. Woolmer. These twenty-five chapters illustrate the ways and means by which neighbours may be made friends, having special reference to schoolfellows. Boys and girls at school may learn lessons of kindness and forbearance from these stories, which, if attended to, would add to their own happiness, and of their little neighbours too.

CHRIST AN EXAMPLE FOR THE YOUNG. By ROBERT MIMPRISS. 6s. 6d. Paternoster-row, E.C. Anything more to our mind for young people we have not seen. There are one hundred lessons, chronologically arranged, on the life of our Saviour, illustrated by fifty or more coloured pictorial representations. Each picture has definitions and exercises, and the whole is worked out for the use of the parent at home, or the teacher at school. A handsome present for young Bible readers.

Messrs. Dean & Son have sent an attractive packet of juvenile literature. LADY TABITHA'S MORNING CONCERT: embossed painting book. A very pretty toy-book full of spirited pictures, and teaching in sprightly verse a careful moral. It will be well for nurseries, for homes, and for nations when the lessons of love and peace taught by the truce agreed upon by the cats and the birds are carried out everywhere, and by everyone. THE LITTLE BIRDS WHO WENT OUT TO SEE THE WORLD: embossed painting-toy-book. The adventures of two pets—a bullfinch and a canary—who escaped from their cages in search of liberty and adventures; after narrow escapes and sorrowful experiences, they agreed that there was no place like home, and returned to it sadder and wiser birds. CHERRY PIE; OR, PICTURES BRIGHT FOR OUR PETS' DELIGHT. A prettily got up book of pictures and simple rhymes that will delight the little ones and help to pass away some holiday hours very pleasantly. The designs are by Claudius, and the verses by Mrs. Whitchurch. GOOD DAY. Designs by G. Penderson and others. Verses by Emma Jane Taylor. Another picture-book, full of bright colours and pleasing designs, with explanatory verses. The birdies and the bunnies in this little volume are charming indeed. THE PLAIN PATH is a book of pretty stories and pictures, showing that the plain path, though it may at first be rough and difficult, is found, by those who walk in it, even the youngest, to be the path of peace and pleasantness. In SAILOR JIM we have coloured pictures and short stories, very readable.

THE CHILDREN'S WEEKLY TEXT. A. Stevenson, 9, North Bank-street, Edinburgh. 1s. Here are fifty-two short and simple texts, suitable for the young.

GOOD NEWS FOR CHILDREN. By Rev. JOHN COLWELL. T. Woolmer. A deeply interesting book for both children and teachers. God's great love as our Father, our Sun, our Helper, and Guide, is very impressively and beautifully displayed.

LOVING WORDS: Short Talks with Young Folks. 1s. F. E. Longley. A tiny book full of short tales, brimming over with loving words and thoughts which cannot fail to make wiser and happier the heart of any little maiden who may happen to find it in her Christmas stocking.

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD: Lessons from the Life of our Lord. By Rev. RICHARD NEWTON, D.D. T. Woolmer. The freshness and beauty of these "lessons" are wonderful. The old, old story is told with such sympathy and power, that one feels almost as if listening to it for the first time. The author writes as one who walks in the light, and reflects it on others. The book is rich in illustrations and anecdotes, and is adorned with choice engravings. It will not only arrest the attention, and awaken the interest of the children, but parents and teachers will find it a most useful handbook. They will do well to take many lessons from it to give to their children or pupils. The teaching of the book is thoroughly practical, and the beauty of holiness is shown in it from beginning to end.

WILL AND WORK, by Emily P. Leakey (W. Mack), sells at 2s., not 1s., as stated in our recent notice of it.

The article, "Painful but Needful," by Pastor Frank White, which recently appeared in our columns, has been published as a small penny book by Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.

NEW MEDALS FOR HEROES.—A movement is being set on foot in connection with "The Quiver" to raise a fund for the permanent provision of a number of Medals of Honour, to be awarded for special heroism in the rescue of human life. Particulars of such cases, properly authenticated, are invited by the Editor of that magazine.

We have also received the following books:—

W. Speaight & Sons, Fetter-lane:
Sermons Preached in Twickenham Congregational Chapel, by Rev. Geo. Walker. Second Edition.

Samuel Harris & Co.:
A Beloved Mother: Memoir of Hannah S. Allen. By her Daughter. 3s. 6d.

THE "ROBIN" DINNERS.—The Rev. Charles Bullock, B.D., Editor of The Fireside News and Home Words, writes from 7, The Paragon, Blackheath, S.E.:—"'Robin' is starting on his winter campaign. He has this year prepared a tiny booklet which contains the story of two of last year's 'Robin dinners,' one given in London, and the other in the provinces. The booklet is called 'How Robin Did It, and How Other Birds May Do It Too,' and a copy will be sent with a receipt to every one who sends a contribution for the London dinners, which now welcome yearly more than 10,000 hungry and happy guests. But 'Robin's' special object this year is to get more into the provinces. The booklet, therefore, gives the story of an admirably-managed dinner in Nottingham, and he hopes this will be the model for 'Robin Dinners' east and west, north and south, wherever a human 'Robin' can be found. Any benevolent 'bird' wishing thus to originate a 'Robin Dinner' out of London, would find a supply of copies of 'How Robin Did It' useful in creating interest and obtaining funds. For this purpose one hundred copies can be supplied for 4s. on application to 'Robin' 7, The Paragon, Blackheath, S.E."

BRITISH SYRIAN SCHOOLS AND BIBLE MISSION.

OUR Bible women continue to go from house to house finding here and there abundant opportunity for sowing beside all waters and among many different sects. Very encouraging are some of the incidents met with, of which we may record one or two in our Bible women's own simple language:—

TYRE.

"I visited a Moslem family, and invited them to send their children to our school. The mother was thankful, adding gratefully, after hearing the Scriptures read, 'Happy are the Christians who know these things; but as for us we have had no one to care for us till now.' I visited another Moslem home, where I found the man had divorced nine wives, and was living with a tenth. I spoke to him of the sin of such conduct, adding that God would surely punish them. They said: 'We know no better, we are like animals, and besides it is our custom; we were never taught when we were children like you were.'

"Another case was that of a man who had a wife he was just going to put away. I spoke much with him, and made him promise not to put her away till I saw him again. He kept his promise, and agreed not to put her away at all, which shows they do listen to us. I was sent to go and speak to a newly-married woman who would not go with her husband to his village. I told her God commanded us to obey our husbands, and that she must try and live in peace and love with hers. His work was in his village, not in Beyrout, and where his work is there he must be. Then I read and prayed with them. The wife said: 'Well, your religion is good; I see you are right, and I will go with my husband to his village when he wishes.'"

BEYROUT.

"I visited a family of the Greek religion, found the mother anxious to become a Protestant, but has much trouble with her husband, who is very bigoted. She said she found no comfort in her religion, and asked me what comfort I found in mine. I told her my faith in Christ brought me comfort, and I also read many passages of Scripture to her. We closed with prayer that God would open the way for her to become a Protestant. She confesses to trusting in Christ alone for salvation.

"A Druze Sheik allows his mother, wife, daughter, grandmother, and grand-daughter to come to our Sunday-school, and listens in the evening while they tell him all they have learned.

"I have just returned from visiting a sick woman whom I have often seen, and as often begged her to accept Christ, knowing she could never recover. How my heart rejoiced to-day on hearing she had accepted salvation through Christ alone. Many a time had she said to me, 'I have an intercessor in the Virgin according to the teaching of my Church.' But now she says, 'None but Christ, none but Christ.' She said to her mother to-day, 'Mother, don't weep for me. I am going to my Redeemer, where I hope to see my three babes He took home some time ago. May I meet you there, my mother; may I meet you there?' The mother was quite overcome."

From these conversations some idea may be gathered of the Bible-women's deeply important work in this Mission. We ask prayer that our workers may be indeed "taught to discretion" in the many varied cases they come in contact with.

The Lord continues his blessing upon our work among the soldiers in the Lebanon. Very distinct tokens of blessing are seen in the readiness of all to receive copies of the Scriptures, and the avidity with which they read the life-giving words aloud to those unable to do so for themselves.

Madame Hiss is doing a great work at Baalbeo among the Mahomedans, but meets with much opposition and annoyance. However, some of our own Institution pupils (Maronites) have received the truth, and are now actually helping her.

THE HELPLESS AND THE OUTCAST.

THIS is the title of a brief report in pamphlet form of the North East London Gospel Missions under the superintendence of Mr. William Chorley. It speaks of the opening of the Gospel Hall near Old Ford, with a cottage attached, thus making five Halls now under the Mission. A Holiday Cottage has also been furnished and opened at Enfield, for giving rest and change to delicate children in the eight Ragged and Sunday-schools, which have altogether more than 1000 children in attendance.

Several instances are recorded of a saving change in notorious drunkards and others, some of whom are now among the most zealous workers. An earnest plea is made by Mr. Chorley, whose address is 2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, N., for means to extend as well as sustain the various Missions. The price of the pamphlet is twopence, and copies may be had of Mr. J. G. Wheeler, 88, Mildmay-park, N.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

La Feiulle Popdaire, edited by M. Saillens for the Committee of the McAll Mission, ceases for want of funds with this year. This is much to be regretted.

PASTOR M. L. ANET, Hon. General Secretary of the Belgian Evangelical Society, suddenly died on December 5, in his seventy-third year. His loss will be greatly felt.

YOUNG WOMEN GOING TO PARIS as governesses, upper servants, &c., may be glad to learn that an office has just been opened by a committee of ladies in the Boulevard Bonne-Nouvelle 8, whose object is to point out respectable situations.

THE BIBLE IN CHINA.—Reports received from the Scottish Bible Society's agents in China concur in deploring the arrest placed on Bible and Mission work by the present war, especially in the South. It is impossible at present to travel through the country for Mission purposes. The Society's Simplified Wun-li Version of the Gospels, however, continues to meet with general acceptance.

JEWISH REFUGEES AT ARTOUF.—A correspondent in Jerusalem states that a clear title deed to the premises of the little colony of Jewish refugees at Artouf has at length been obtained, after a year's anxiety and suspense. The trustees have now sent a petition to Constantinople, desiring permission to build houses. It is hoped that influence may be brought to bear on the Moslem authorities there so that this request may speedily be granted. A resident missionary at Artouf is also a great desideratum.

PASSAIC, U.S.A.—A lady, writing to a correspondent in London, under date December 3, says: "We have had an important revival in Temperance work here, having had with us two great advocates of the cause. This has resulted in great good, having established in our small city a Women's Christian Temperance Union, and also a Young Men's Reform Club. We are about to have a reading-room and other attractions, that will help to keep men from spending their time hanging over bars and other places that cannot possibly help them to a higher and better life. I am very much interested in the work and anxious for its success."

SAILORS IN SWEDEN.—Our labours among the sailors have been crowned with much success. Every Sunday night we have a sermon in connection with an after-meeting for anxious inquirers, and prayer-meetings are held almost every day. The Lord has greatly blessed our efforts. The sailors almost daily visit the Home for reading, writing, and personal conversation. Our Biblewoman has distributed tracts in the harbour to seamen and others. With great thankfulness we have received gifts from England and Sweden, consisting of newspapers, tracts, Bibles, and books, but help is still needed to buy Bibles and books. We have this year sent out forty-five "Bible-bags." We hope our brethren will pray that the Lord may bless our efforts still more abundantly.

Halmstad, Sweden, Dec. 4. FR. ENGELKR.

BLACKBURN.—A series of meetings has been conducted here by Mr. Richard Coad, of Cornwall. A goodly number signed the abstinence pledge.

THE HOUR OF PRAYER.

MOVEMENTS IN RUSSIA.

LAST week some of the noonday hours at Aldersgate-street were of exceptional interest. On Monday, Dr. Baedeker, who had just returned from Russia, was present, and gave some particulars of his experiences. He rejoiced to be back in London again, and to tell the friends how their prayers on his behalf had been answered. He first visited Munich, a Roman Catholic town, where very little is being done in Christian work. There is no liberty to hold Gospel meetings, but addresses on stated subjects are permitted, without prayer or any appearance of public worship. He announced some addresses, and large audiences came together. He passed on to Prague, Bucharest, and Odessa, where the same opportunities were afforded him. At the close of the addresses a number of inquirers gathered round him for conversation.

In his travels many nationalities were met with, especially on the steamers in the Black Sea. Many of these gratefully received New Testaments in their own tongue; on one occasion he was able to speak to them through the interpretation of a young Jew. He was struck with the number of young men and also of intelligent Jews who came to his meetings. He found many of those who hold the truth, but have not attached themselves to any Christian church. At Odessa they asked if he was not going to have a special address for Jews; he said he would gladly do so if the Government allowed. On a Saturday night he announced an address on the Kingdom of God in relation to Israel. Between 500 and 600 Jews came and crowded round. It was a very moving sight to see them so eager to hear the truth.

M. RABINOWITCH.

Dr. Baedeker then referred to the notable movement in Bessarabia, and told of a visit he had paid to M. Rabinowitch, at Kischiniew. We may here quote from a letter written by Dr. Baedeker before leaving Odessa:—

"M. Rabinowitch is evidently a most remarkable man. He is a lawyer by profession, and in easy circumstances. He is forty-five years of age. His eyes have been opened, and he is full of the Holy Ghost; he sees Christ everywhere, and he speaks constantly of Him. Old Testament Scripture opens to him in a wonderful way. His knowledge of Hebrew is now become a fountain of light and life to him. Everything he sees and hears seems to be full of the revelation of the Son of God. He speaks German pretty well, so that I was able to understand and to make myself understood; but I did not always find it easy to follow him in his figurative speech, full of original illustrations. He is a warm-hearted, loving brother. The interest in the movement is widespread. In Odessa, also, I have made the acquaintance of some intelligent Jews, who, in most points, go with Rabinowitch. It may lead eventually to a great awakening amongst Israel, although the greater mass of them are now out-and-out Materialists. An application is just now before the Minister of the Interior, favoured by the Governor of Bessarabia, for permission to build a hall for these Judaic Christians, and if this be granted, Rabinowitch will step out into a more public activity, but at present his influence and teaching find an entrance in many hearts.

"He told me that he had been invited to come to London, but he declined, not having any call in that direction, nor does he wish to be brought into connection with any missionary endeavours. If the Jews, who keep a watchful eye on all his movements, were to find out that he sought the protection of English or other foreign societies, or that he received any pecuniary support, they would suspect him of selfish motives, and thus his influence would at once be paralysed. This is the opinion of himself and of Pastor Faltin at Kischieniew, and also of his friends in Odessa. When asked what message he would send to the Christians in England, he said Heb. xiii. 18 described all he wished them to do.

"I believe that this movement will prove a link in the chain of developments which will finally result in the return and conversion of Israel, but at present it seems only a step in advance, and one cannot possibly say how it may affect the large Jewish population of South Russia. It is certainly unique in its character, and unlike anything that has gone before. Rabinowitch is quite the Jew in character and feeling, without sharing in the degradation of his people; he has a strong loving impulse towards them, but he is also awake to their faults. The best service that can be rendered for the present is to leave the work in his hands, bearing him up in prayer. He does not speak English, although he is able to read and understand a little. It did me good to spend some hours with him, and to hear what depths he fathoms in Old Testament Scripture, which the ordinary reader can have no conception of."

Some details as to M. Rabinowitch's conversion were given by Dr. Baedeker. He had read in the Scriptures of the fruitful land flowing with milk and honey, which God gave to his forefathers. He went to visit Palestine, and saw it was in a very different condition from that he had read about—it was a barren and unfruitful land. As he sat on the Mount of Olives he thought to himself, "How can this be? Is it possible that Jesus Christ was really the Messiah, and because we have rejected Him this desolation has come upon the land?" He took his Bible and read, and it spoke to him in life-giving words, so that now he saw Christ as the One who was foretold, and who came to bear the sins of the world. Strange to say, while the Holy Spirit was thus striving with him, his own son, while studying as a civil engineer in St. Petersburg, was passing through a similar process. He felt that the Jewish faith did not satisfy him, and as his father was searching the Scriptures in Palestine he was doing the same in St. Petersburg, and was led to accept Jesus Christ as the promised Messiah. Dr. Baedeker said he had letters in his pocket from several other Jews who had been led to the same conclusion, though they had not seen their way formally to join the Christian Church.

MISSIONS TO THE CONGO.

At the Noon Meeting on the following day three young American brethren were present, en route from New York to the region of the Congo. They told, in simple language, and out of full hearts, how they had been constrained to give themselves to this work. In the midst of a business life they had heard the call to go forth and preach the Gospel on the Congo. A brief time of training in one of the New York colleges was exclusively devoted to the study of the Word of God, and now they were proceeding to the West coast of Africa. A Chief favourable to Mission work had invited them to go. The port at which they hoped to land was greatly demoralised by drink, and other vicious practices. Their ultimate destination was a thousand miles up the northern bank of the Congo. They requested that much prayer should be made to God on their behalf.

Prayer having been offered, Mr. Robert Paton referred to a noted sermon by Edward Irvine on Apostolic Missions, which might be condensed into the words, "Go! Lo I am with you." He was followed by Dr. Ziemann, who had just arrived from Germany. He referred specially to Berlin, where he had happy fellowship in Gospel work with M. Von Schluembach. Doors are opening on every hand, and a deeper sense of spiritual need seems to be taking hold of the German people.

Before the close of the meeting, a young brother from Scotland, Rev. Alexander Cowe, of Berwick, came in and communicated the welcome tidings that he had just been accepted by the Baptist Missionary Society for work on the Congo. In a few earnest words he entreated all the Christian young men present to consider their duty—what they ought to do in the light of the crying need for more labourers in the dark heathen fields. He told of the great blessing he had experienced in his own soul since he had yielded to the promptings of God's spirit to enter on evangelistic work abroad. He hopes to sail in the same steamer as the three young brethren from New York.

This meeting was felt by all to be a most remarkable and memorable one, even among the many memorable seasons that are vouchsafed during these noontide hours of prayer, in the heart of the greatest city of the world.

MR. RUSKIN ON COUNTRY LIFE.

IN one of his recent Oxford lectures Mr. Ruskin referred, in his peculiar trenchant and outspoken way, to some blots of modern social life. He said:

"I need scarcely tell any of my pupils that my own art teaching has been exclusively founded on the hope of getting people to enjoy country life, and to care for its simple pleasures and modest enjoyments. But I find now that the ideal in the minds of all young people, however amiable and well meaning, is to marry as soon as possible, and then to live in the most fashionable part of the largest town they can afford to compete with the rich inhabitants of, in the largest house they can strain their incomes to the rent of, with the water laid on at the top, the gas at the bottom, huge plate-glass windows out of which they may look uninterruptedly at a brick wall, a drawing-room on the scale of Buckingham Palace, with Birmingham fixtures, and patent everythings going of themselves everywhere — with, for all intellectual aids to felicity, a few bad prints, a few dirty and foolish books, and a quantity of photographs of the people they know, or of any passing celebrities. This is the present ideal of English life, without exception, for the middle classes—and a more miserable, contemptible, or criminal one never was formed by any nation made under the wondering stars. It implies perpetual anxiety, lazy and unjustifiable pride, innumerable petty vexations, daily more poignant greed for money, and the tyrannous compulsion of the labouring poor into every form of misery; and it implies, further, total ignorance of all the real honour of human life and visible beauty of the visible world."

The lecture was mainly on "Birds," and he dwelt on the pleasure that might be derived from an artistic study of their plumage. This led him to remark as follows: "If any of you care to put your lives a little to rights, and to prime your own feathers for what flight is in them—don't go to London, nor to any other town in the spring; don't let the morning winds of May find your cheeks pale and your eyes bloodshot with sitting up all night, nor the violets bloom for you only in the salesman's bundles, nor the birds sing around, if not above the graves you have dug for yourselves before your time. Time enough you will have hereafter to be deaf to their song, and ages enough to be blind to their brightness, if you seek not the sight given now. If there be any human love in your youth, if any sacred hope, if any faithful religion, let them not be defiled and quenched among the iniquities of the multitude. Your Love is in the clefts of the Rock, when the flowers appear on the earth, and the time of the singing of birds is come, and the God of all Love calls to you 'from the top of Amana, from the top of Shenir and Hermon,' calls to every pure spirit among the children of men, as they to those they love best,—

'Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away.'"

CHILDREN'S HOME, PADDINGTON.—This Home for poor children suffering from joint diseases was opened in 1877. Out of the 278 cases which have been admitted, only ten have failed to receive benefit. During the past year about a hundred cases have been treated, most of which have been cured. Many letters of gratitude have been received from parents for the benefit their children have derived in the Home. Miss Hall Hall, the lady superintendent and founder, whose address is Witley Manor, Godalming, will be very glad of help in extending the benefits of the Home to others. Furniture also for the new branch will be gratefully received.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT. Progress!!!

The Committee desire to express their VERY GRATEFUL THANKS for the practical expressions of sympathy recently received to carry out the proposed MIDNIGHT and AFTERNOON MISSION to the Fallen, both in London and the Provinces.

10,000 Portions of HOLY SCRIPTURE and GOSPEL TRACTS have been DISTRIBUTED amongst the Fallen Women of London. In view of the New Year a SERIES of MIDNIGHT and AFTERNOON MEETINGS will be held in the METROPOLIS, also in NORTHERN MANUFACTURING and SEAPORT TOWNS.

£5 WILL MISSION A DISTRICT AND PROVIDE TEA FOR A MIDNIGHT MEETING.

WILL 3 FRIENDS NOW KINDLY CONTRIBUTE £5 EACH, 21 having done so.

Christian Friends desirous of co-operating by contributing toward the expenses of a Meeting (or helping by prayer), are invited to communicate with Mr. J. H. L. CHRISTIEN, Organising Secretary, at the Office. Donations may be sent to MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., or to

C. WILSON McCREE,
Financial Secretary.

THE CHILDREN OF THE STREET.

The woes of the Poorest of our City Poor can never be healed until the Children are fully reached and raised.

The Volunteer Army of over three thousand Christian men and women, besides many paid Teachers in connection with THE RAGGED SCHOOL UNION, have now 50,000 of these poor Children under their care. These they educate, teach cleanliness, order, decency, train to work, and, above all, instruct in the fear of the Lord.

These Ragged Schools have taken between three and four hundred thousand Children off the Streets of London, and sent them forth as honest, industrious citizens.

Who will help this great work? Who at this Christmas season will help to give these Children—wretched, unfriended, and miserable—some treats, and feed those actually starving? Who will help to sustain in full working order these Missions of Benevolence in the poorest districts of London? The Children are there; the Teachers are at work; but

FUNDS ARE GREATLY WANTED.

Turkish Missions' Aid Society.

For the Promotion of Christian Work within the Lands of the Bible.

THE operations of this Society under its new management are not sufficiently known. It is undenominational, and distributes its funds impartially. Last year forty separate agencies were aided, mostly American, but many of British origin. Contributions are earnestly invited. With a larger revenue a vast amount of solid good might, under the Divine blessing, be accomplished.

KENSINGTON GARDENS
MISSION HALL,
BRIGHTON.

This Hall, built and put in trust in 1865, is in constant use for Services, Sunday-school, Mothers' Meetings, Temperance Meetings, &c.

It lies in a densely populated district, and is used by Conformists and Nonconformists alike. £1,000 (towards which £350 are already given or promised) are needed to secure adjoining premises, and so adapt them that this excellent work may be largely extended.

The work is well known to Rev. E. L. ROXBY and Rev. J. B. FIGGIS.

Donations will be thankfully received by F. V. HADLOW, Honorary Secretary, 8, Prince Albert-street, Brighton; or by G. CAMPBELL, Esq., Capital and Counties Bank, Brighton.

RESCUE SOCIETY,
FORMERLY OF 85, QUEEN ST., CHEAPSIDE.
Offices: 79, FINSBURY PAVEMENT, E.C.

SPECIAL ATTENTION is called to the CHANGE IN THE ADDRESS of the Society's Offices, which is rendered necessary by the intended destruction of the old premises for CITY IMPROVEMENTS.

For upwards of THIRTY-ONE YEARS this Society, founded by the late Mr. DANIEL COOPER, has been carrying on its blessed work of helping to reclaim the fallen and save the endangered Young Women and Girls.

In this happy yet arduous work it has been eminently successful, and more than TWELVE THOUSAND and FIVE HUNDRED young persons have passed through its various Homes. Of this large number, gathered from all parts of the United Kingdom and abroad, over EIGHTY PER CENT. have been placed in service, restored to their friends, or otherwise satisfactorily accounted for at the time of their leaving the Homes.

FUNDS ARE NOW MOST URGENTLY NEEDED, several hundred pounds being required to close the year free from debt.

CONTRIBUTIONS will be kindly received as usual by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, Offices of THE CHRISTIAN, or will be thankfully acknowledged by the Secretary, Mr. C. STUART THORPE, 79, Finsbury Pavement, E.C. [949]

What are we to do?

A CALL FOR HELP FROM THE WEST!

Very earnestly do the Committee of the LATYMER ROAD MISSION appeal for Help from each Reader.

The lowness of their Funds is causing them great anxiety.

Fully £700 are needed before the end of the year.

The Lord has marvellously blessed the Gospel Temperance work since the opening of the New Hall.

Hundreds of Ragged Girls and Boys are gathered in each evening.

The Mission work consists of Sunday Schools, with an average attendance of 323 children; Children's Gospel Services; Evangelistic Meetings; Bands of Hope; Ragged Boys' Evening Shelters; Ragged Girls' Evening Shelters; Mothers' Meeting; Night School; Sick Children's Dinner Table; Soup Kitchen; Farthing Bank; Industrial Exhibitions; Christian Workmen's Club; Infant Day Nursery; Convalescent Homes (Worthing and Ramsgate); and other agencies for good.

Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT will be happy to take charge of Contributions, which may also be sent to EDWARD BLAIR, Esq., Fretherne House, 29, York-place; or to

AULAY MACAULAY, Hon. Sec.,

VISITORS ARE ALWAYS WELCOME.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of SHAFTESBURY, K.G.

ESTABLISHED 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES:

27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN;
AND 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE, or by the Proprietors of this paper.

NOTE.—Subscriptions or Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Friends will please notice the exact title "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews.

This Society undertakes a work beyond the aim and capability of ordinary Missionary Societies. It is founded on an unsectarian basis, and receives its support from Christians of all denominations. Its Committee and Agents belong to several Christian bodies, and its Honorary Secretaries are A. SAPHIR, D.D., and J. H. RIGG, D.D.

The Society has upwards of 100 who carry the Gospel to their brethren in England, Italy, Germany, Switzerland, Austria, Russia, Turkey, and North Africa. Their labours are supplemented by the work of schoolmasters and colporteurs. Tracts and copies of the Scriptures are circulated. Many Jews have by this Society been led to believe that "Jesus is the Christ." Much good has been done among the thousands of Jews in London by the Missionaries, by the "House of Call," and by the Mission House, 25, Church-street, Spitalfields.

Increased Funds are urgently needed, and will be thankfully received by the Secretary, REV. J. DUNLOP, at the Office, 96, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, London.

Letters to the Editor.

CHAPLAINS AND PRISONERS.

SIR,—In answer to the letter of your correspondent "Ex-Prisoner," I wish to say that my experience of prison life is very different to that which he states. I was an inmate of Holloway Prison for three months, and I thank God it was the means of bringing me to Jesus. Instead of neglecting the prisoners, I don't think anyone could have taken more trouble about their salvation than the chaplain there. Instead of "indecent haste," I have never seen a service conducted in a more reverent manner in every shape and form.

I know nearly all the prisoners give the chaplain a bad name because he preaches the Word of God so faithfully to them. I was at work, out of my cell, among some of them, and because they knew the chaplain visited me, the language they used was so bad that I asked the Governor to move me into a different part of the prison. This he did, and I was very thankful. I can now praise God that, being there, it was the means of bringing me to see the love of a Saviour, and I pray the chaplain may be the means of bringing many more prisoners to seek peace in Jesus.

Might I add a word in praise of St. Giles's Christian Mission? If it had not been for Mr. Wheatley I do not know how I should have got work, or what I should have done. I have reason to be very thankful for the help the Mission afforded me in every way.—Yours respectfully,

ANOTHER EX-PRISONER.

POPERY IN THE ENGLISH CHURCH.

DEAR SIR,—Will you permit me a space in your valuable paper, as I wish to make public a matter which has just come under my notice—viz., the circulation of a most pernicious, I may truthfully say, blasphemous little book entitled "The English Catholic's Vade Mecum"? Though a member of the Church of England, I had no idea that any of her clergy were allowed to use such a book; now, as there may be others as ignorant as myself upon this point, I feel impelled to do all in my power to make it known.

I live unfortunately in a High Church parish, and find that the vicar circulates this book both amongst the rich and poor of his flock.

I am sure in these days it is the duty of all Bible-taught Christians to protest against such false doctrines contained in this book as contrary to the Word of God, and to contend earnestly for the faith which was once delivered to the saints.

I quote one or two sentences from the Preface, bound up with the book of Common Prayer. "The English Catholic's Vade Mecum will supply, in one volume of convenient size, all the prayers necessary to enable Christians to perform their ordinary morning, mid-day, and evening devotions; to assist at the sacrifice; to confess and communicate devoutly; to commemorate the sacred seasons and Saints' Days; to assist the dying; to pray for the dead."

Here are directions for family worship: "If there be no oratory in the house, let some devotional picture or representation (e.g., a picture or figure of the Crucifixion, Christ in his mother's arms) be placed in a conspicuous part of the room used for the prayers. Before the prayers begin, let all be seated, and let the master of the family read a portion of the sacred Scriptures . . . then let the office of prime (in the morning), or compline (at night) be said, all kneeling or standing with their faces turned towards the sacred object mentioned."

The following are quotations from the Work itself:—On page 2, with respect to "common forms of prayer," I find the following on "Confession:"

I confess to Almighty God, to blessed Mary, and to all saints, that I have sinned exceedingly in thought, word, and deed, by my fault, by my own fault, by my own grievous fault (here strike your breast three times), wherefore I beg the blessed Mary and all saints may pray to the Lord our God for me. . . ." Page 7, Morning Prayer, Act of Oblation: "I offer unto Thee, in union with the prayers, intercessions and good works of the blessed Virgin Mary, and all saints in heaven, and of all thy faithful here upon earth."

In the Communion Service, which in this book is called "The Mass," we find the doctrine of Transubstantiation (on page 24) fully developed in the following sentence. "It is as yet only bread and wine, but by a miracle of thy power and grace will mortly become the body and blood of thy beloved Son. . . . Let those saints, whose memory we celebrate on earth, remember us before thy throne in heaven, and obtain mercy for us."

On Confession (page 35) we have, "I confess to Almighty God, to Blessed Mary, to all Saints, and to thee, my ghostly Father, that I have sinned exceedingly, in thought, word, and deed, by my own fault, by my own grievous fault (here strike your breast thrice). Since the time of my last confession, when I received absolution, and which was —— ago, I accuse myself. . . . Wherefore I beg Blessed Mary, all Saints, and thee my ghostly Father, to pray to the Lord our God for me (here the Priest will give any needful instruction or direction, and will assign a penance)." We find on page 77, "A Litany for the Faithful Departed," full of the Popish error of "Prayers for the Dead."

One or two headings to other subjects in this book will suffice to point out the hurtful doctrines contained therein. On page 80, "The Rosary of the most Holy name of Jesus."

Page 90, "Prayers on the five wounds of Jesus Christ our Lord."

Page 127, "Hymns to the Holy Mother of God."

Page 46, Hymn, "The blessed Sacrament," from which I quote one verse:—

> "Oh see! within a creature's hand
> The vast Creator deigns to be,
> Reposing infant-like, as though,
> On Joseph's arm or Mary's knee.
> Sweet Sacrament, we Thee adore!
> Oh, make us love Thee more and more."

The foregoing extracts will show the poisonous teaching inculcated into the minds of all who use such a Vade Mecum, but especially the young. Is it possible that our Bishops are ignorant that such a book, bound up with the Book of Common Prayer, is circulated by the clergy of our Church? or do they know it, and yet make no effort to stop such unsound teaching?

Surely some means should be used to check the progress of such errors, which are undermining the principles of the Reformation, and thus making of none effect the blood shed by our martyrs.

Yours truly, AN ENGLISH PROTESTANT.

"SHE DRINKS."

SIR,—Your correspondent, John T. Markley, writes upon this subject as if "the religious press" had said nothing about it. It has been most freely ventilated, and, what is better, the evil has now for some years been skilfully met in many quarters. Have the various Gospel Temperance Missions done nothing? Are all the agencies so actively at work for the amelioration of the evils of society a failure? Do our ministers so far forget their ministry that they have left this first great evil in the background? I think not.

A friend of mine, an energetic Christian worker in this department, tells me that a public-house facing his residence, which used nightly to entice on an average 200 women and girls to "the tap," has in the course of two years so far gone down that he can count about forty females now to the previous 200, and this in an increasing neighbourhood. The class of women, too, he says, is lower than that of two years ago. A London missionary speaks of 300 homes he visits, and says that out of 105 which were once "drunkards' homes," there are only thirty-three now where the drink is really indulged in by the mothers. He attributes this to the literature, to the various Christian missions at work, and to the education of children, who bring new ideas of sanitation and health from school to home. The words "She drinks" are not now heard so much because of the increase of the habit among women, but rather because of the decrease, since it is regarded as more of a disgrace to be a drunkard now that abstinence is "the fashion," than it formerly was, and a woman is exposed if she yields to the temptation.

Again, it is not nearly so usual for medical men to prescribe stimulants now as formerly. The high pressure at which we live to-day is, I think, the largest factor in this matter of drink among the better classes. Above all physical weakness, or "the monotony of household duties," as a reason for this falling into the sin of intemperance, there is one which we sometimes forget. Those who forsake self-respect, the joys of home and society, and the duties of life, for drink, are "without God, and without hope in the world." The Lord Jesus Christ is Himself the remedy, and we but beat about the bush to no purpose when we seek any other lasting and effectual cure for this blot upon our civilisation. A reclaimed drunkard, after eight months' trial, said: "It is hard, and of myself I could not stand; but the blessed Lord makes it possible, even in me." She had become a Christian, and then a sober woman.—Faithfully yours,

A CHRISTIAN.

CORPUS CHRISTI.

WITHIN the tomb, that sacred ark,
A heavenly light is shining now;
The angels twain dispel the dark,
Resplendent glory crowns each brow.

Yon form, embalmed, enshrouded lies,
They kneel, and bare the covered head;
The thorn-pierced brow, the curtained eyes,
Ah, yes, the Prince of Heaven is dead!

A kingly beauty in his face,
Still marks their prostrate Sovereign there;
O what benevolence and grace
The features of the dead Christ wear!

Then came sweet memories to them,
How He had reigned with God on high,
Before the world was made by Him,
Or any knew what 'twas to die.

Remembered anthems utterance found
In Joseph's tomb that awful night,
And angels, with accordant sound,
Make their long vigils glad and light.

Ecstatic melody they make,
Sweeter than e'er was known on earth,
Before proclaiming seraphs wake
The echoes at the Saviour's birth.

It burns with love, is all aglow,
As if (direct from God to them)
Its thrilling strains, intense though low,
Would fain impart their life to Him.

Saratoga, N.Y. A. L. S.

MR. FRANCIS MURPHY, according to the latest accounts from the other side, had begun a Gospel Temperance campaign in Pittsburgh, where his labours were greatly blessed some years ago, in the early days of his career as an advocate of abstinence.

SOUTHEND, ESSEX.—A branch of the Young Women's Christian Association has been organised here during the past few days, and rooms have been taken for the same in Alexandra-street, a few doors from those of the local Y.M.C.A. The Hon. Secretary is Miss H. Baker, Rosedale-villa, Southend.

PENNY TESTAMENT MISSION.—Ned Wright has a "Gospel Tricycle," so constructed that it carries a supply of penny New Testaments. He has had great success in the sale of these, and purposes, if the funds are provided, to set other tricycles agoing. We are sure many friends have only to be informed of this novel and ingenious method of spreading broadcast the Gospel message, to bear a hand in the movement. Mr. Wright's address is Lebanon-villa, Greenhill-park, Harlesden, N.W.

A MISSION WEEK IN DUBLIN.—There has just been concluded in the Mission Church, Townsend-street, Dublin, a week of special meetings, which night after night have been well attended. A very pleasing feature in the proceedings of the week was the nightly attendance of a number of young men who had once been boys in some of the Society's schools. They had so profited by the training received that they were now in comfortable situations in Dublin. Better than that, many of them were decided Christians, and had come to their old Mission Church to render what assistance they could. It was encouraging to find many going into the inquiry-room night after night, and it is believed that not a few were brought from darkness to light.

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.—When so much life and property are being lost at sea in the heavy gales that visit our shores at this season, it may seem a small matter that many thousands of books and magazines, &c., on board the 7000 ships which carry forecastle libraries in bags, have been destroyed. Nevertheless, the crews value these library bags greatly, and it would be a great boon to them if boxes, hampers, sacks, or parcels of disused books and magazines, &c., were sent prepaid to any of our 69 chaplains and readers, or to the Office of the Mission. If ladies would make us a number of strong "crash" bags, 18 inches wide, by 12, with 3 inch flaps, and 3 eyelet holes in the back to haul them up by, it would be a great help.

BY FAITH, NOT SIGHT.

DARK though my path, I walk by faith, not sight;
My Father leads—I have no fear of ill,
His brightness pierces through the gloom of night,
And by a word He bids the storm be still.

What though life's sorrows gather o'er my head?
What though the joys I cherish most should fail?
What though with thorns and briars my way is spread?
And whispered doubts my feeble heart assail?

The storm may rage, I shall not be dismayed;
No power can snatch me from the Almighty arms;
On the Eternal Rock my feet are stayed—
Though in the world, yet free from its alarms.

Father! I thank Thee that I cannot trace
The path Thou hast in love planned out for me;
For every day I bless the wondrous grace
That keeps my soul in sweet security.

Resting in Thee there is no room for care—
I know Thy grace sufficient is, and free,
I know Thy love is with me, everywhere,
Thy strength alone supports my frailty.

Though led in devious paths, all strange, unknown,
Trusting I walk, nor fear though trials come,
Since 'tis Thy hand that guides me, Thine alone,
I know, whate'er betides, it leads me home.

THE MARQUIS OF CHOLMONDELEY died last week at Houghton Hall. He was born on August 31, 1800, was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, and sat as M.P. before the first Reform Bill, for Castle Rising, and from 1852 to 1857 for South Hampshire. He married in 1825 a daughter of the Right Hon. Charles Arbuthnot, who died in 1878. Both in Norfolk and Cheshire he was an excellent landlord, and till lately took a prominent part in local affairs as a magistrate and otherwise. A Chester correspondent says: "The news of the Marquis's death has been received throughout Cheshire, where he was one of the largest and most considerate of landlords, with feelings of deep regret." The Marquis was an earnest friend of all religious movements, and held frequent services personally in the large hall at Cholmondeley Castle.

The London Samaritan Society and Homerton Mission.

At the present time the work of the LONDON SAMARITAN SOCIETY is in great and urgent need of Funds to carry on its various efforts for the good of the Poor and Destitute in London, and for its reception of Patients in its Convalescent Home at Sandgate, Kent.

BRIEFLY STATED, OUR OBJECTS ARE—

Free Dinners, Boots and Clothing for Destitute Children.

Free Breakfasts, Dinners, Soup Suppers, Coal, Clothing, and general assistance to the really Destitute Poor in all parts of London.

Free Lodgings to deserving applicants.

Assisting Emigrants by Loans, or otherwise, as agreed.

A Sea-side and Convalescent Home at Sandgate for Men, Women, and Children from all parts of the United Kingdom.

Assistance is given to the Destitute without any Sectarian distinction whatever, and without favour or partiality. Enquiries are made by our own Agents, or by the very many Clergymen, Ministers, Secretaries of Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, District Visitors, City Missionaries, Ragged School Workers, and others who take a deep interest in our work, and act as Honorary Almoners on behalf of the Society, and at whose Schoolrooms or Mission Halls Free Meals have been given by this Society. Over 100,000 Free Meals were given last winter.

DONATIONS will be most gratefully received by Mr. JOHN JAMES JONES; or

Mr. HENRY HICKS BOARD, Secretary, 57 & 59, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C.

"PEACE we shall have if we will cease from self-effort! BLESSING, if we will fall in with God's will! and POWER, if we will let the Lord use us for His own purpose, and for His glory!"—EXTRACT.

A PERSONAL CHRIST.

32 pages, Crown 16mo. Price One Penny.

"Is Christ Himself the object of my heart's first and deepest love? If He had not been the Object of faith above all, I could not have been saved. Is He, then, in like manner, the Object of my heart's devotion now? And is His name to me a name above every other? There is nothing else that can or will unite souls, or give such power or testimony before the world for Christ."—EXTRACT.

The People's Life of Wesley.

128 Pages, Crown 8vo. Cheap Edition, Tinted Covers, 6d.
With Portrait, Cloth Limp, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.

JOHN WESLEY:

HIS LIFE AND TIMES.

By JOHN W. KIRTON, LL.D., Author of "Happy Homes, and How to Make Them," "Buy Your Own Cherries," &c.

"The spirit of a great reformer's life has seldom been presented in a form at once so brief and lively. . . . The memoir pourtrays Wesley in all the aspects of a character that was many-sided. Every page sparkles with edifying anecdote. . . . The book costs only a SIXPENCE, and ought to have a sale of many thousands."—Christian Leader.

"We should suppose this SIXPENNY book will sell by thousands, and do good wherever it finds a place."—Baptist Messenger.

"Written in a popular style; yet of high literary merit. One hundred and twenty-eight pages, crown 8vo., 6d.! After this, who need be without a Life of Wesley?"
Primitive Methodist Magazine.

"In some nineteen chapters Dr. Kirton tells, in a popular and fascinating style, the life of the Great Founder of Methodism. It is, emphatically, the Biography of Wesley for the people. The volume contains 128 pages; and the price is only SIXPENCE. To every Primitive Methodist we say, Get it at once!"—Primitive Methodist.

"The happiest and most successful attempt yet made to present, in a brief compass, a really life-like account of Mr. Wesley and his work. We most heartily commend it. A copy should be in every home. The Publishers and Author deserve universal thanks for placing within reach of every one in the community such a gem of a book."—Irish Christian Advocate.

The People's Life of Whitefield.

128 Pages, Crown 8vo. Cheap Edition, Tinted Covers, 6d.
With Portrait, Cloth Limp, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.

GEORGE WHITEFIELD:

HIS LIFE AND TIMES.

By J. R. ANDREWS, Author of "The Life of Oliver Cromwell."

"A SIXPENNY well-printed and well-told life of this extraordinary man of God deserves a world-wide circulation, and will probably be read by thousands."—Baptist Messenger.

"A marvellous record of earnest labours and successful work; one, too, that may be purchased for SIXPENCE."—Irish Congregational Magazine.

"We cannot imagine a better SIXPENNYWORTH of human authorship. Oh that every Minister in the three kingdoms possessed this 'Life of Whitefield,' and would read it through! Why, it would set the Church in a blaze! It would be a noble thing if some wealthy man would see to it that this biography was placed in every manse in the United Kingdom."
REV. C. H. SPURGEON in The Sword and the Trowel.

"A most interesting, and withal marvellously cheap, biography of the great Evangelist of the last century—the Moody of his day."—Baptist Witness.

OF WEEKLY CASES.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "The Christian," WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of Mrs. ANNIE PERRY, of SUTTON-AT-HONE, KENT.

It was in June last year this patient first wrote me, giving me (on my printed form of questions and answers) a clear history of her case.

For three years she had suffered. The first symptoms were continual aching pains in the chest, then expectoration of much frothy phlegm, which had turned lately to yellowish green, with spasmodic difficulty of breathing, with burning heats, ankles slightly swollen. Two doctors had attended her, she had also visited Brompton Hospital, but found no relief. Seeing one of my weekly cases in the Christian World she obtained my book, and, in an utterly prostrate condition, applied to me.

There was not so rapid an improvement in her case as in some, owing to there being spinal weakness through long nursing an invalid child. But by lying on the back, well ordered diet, the use of a liniment as I directed, and continuance with the Balsam, &c.:—

—In the course of two months there was a striking change for the better. Subsequent letters continue to report her still "on the mend." In November she came to Coombe Lodge to see me. On examination there was distinct evidence of good. "No active disease now. Simply weakness."

On July 24th, last, she wrote me:—"I wish to thank you for the wonderful good that your medicine (under God) has done for me. I have now left it off one month—being well, and better now than I have been for four years. Everything else had failed. Make any use of this. I would gladly answer any enquiries. Yours gratefully, ANNIE PERRY."

N.B.—This patient followed my treatment for eleven months. I commend this fact to the notice of any impatient persons who expect to find themselves cured in a few weeks (as a matter of course) because they hear of some cases of rapid recovery.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

"MANNA CAKE."

Children take it readily; they do not suspect its properties; they like its sweet, strong flavour. Truly, termed by an Agent, "The Children's Friend." Manna Cake is the mildest and yet the most certain in action of all aperients; it does not gripe, and leaves no after constipation. A singularly mild, pleasant, and efficacious substitute for Castor Oil.

From W. H. HAYWARD, Chemist, Trowbridge:—"A Physician in the West of England says he gave Calomel and Jalap in repeated doses without effect, but a Manna Cake acted almost immediately."
